Stephen Joel Trachtenberg: An Appreciation

When Stephen Joel Trachtenberg arrived at The George Washington University, his appointment as president was, as such appointments usually are, an informed wager. His energy, his history as a university president, and his extensive range of Washington-based experience augured well. But GW was a large and complex university with a daunting array of schools and constituencies – from the President of the United States to the most impoverished city residents.

To say that President Trachtenberg has validated our hopes is to underestimate. The report that follows highlights a range of accomplishments that would justify a lifetime of effort, but in fact represents a single decade of heartfelt dedication. It is difficult for any member or friend of our University community not to be gratified – indeed, thrilled – by these triumphs.

Not the least of President Trachtenberg's accomplishments has been to demonstrate, over and over again, that intelligence and hard work can operate in tandem with humor and fun. He can make a room laugh in the midst of discussing the most difficult and serious issue. He is a role model for the notion that work and play need not be antitheses. And who can fail to smile – and be educated – when a brief note to our president draws a three- or four-page reply that is nothing less than a “grand tour of the subject,” filled with humor and insight? It is typical of GW’s leader that he has turned a bronze hippopotamus into a symbol of the academy.

We thank you, Stephen Joel Trachtenberg, and look forward to lots, lots more.

John D. Zeglis
Chairman, The Board of Trustees
The George Washington University

The University We Have In Common

John Zeglis' overly generous appreciation moved me deeply when I read it – and was closely followed by some moments of self-scrutiny. Since my arrival on campus in the summer of 1988, I have been so immersed in the interactive position of University President that I have seldom had time to consider whether I was in fact a “leader” or a “follower.”

What I saw around me then was a school whose formidable presence testified to the devotion of those who founded it, those who nurtured it in its progress through the 19th century, and those who built it, literally and figuratively, as it moved through the dramatic years of the 20th century. Events of global magnitude, as they impacted on Washington, impacted – it goes without saying – on GW as well. The work of my predecessor, President Lloyd H. Elliott, had brought the University to a level of stature and stability that many other schools of higher education could envy.

But as I began my systematic exploration of the campus, a thought kept nagging at my inward spirit: “This place looks, this place feels, as if it’s just about to take off.” The energies I sensed among GW’s faculty, its administrators, its staff members, and its students seemed to cry out for a new expression of some kind. And slowly but surely the conclusion took shape in my mind: The devoted labors of more than a century had built a university infrastructure whose peak was nowhere in sight. As much as any other university I had ever scrutinized, GW was an emblem of possibility, and a dramatic channel for ambition.

So my “grand strategy” as GW’s president quickly became one of attentive and responsive enthusiasm. I saw myself, if you will, as a gardener of sorts, clearing the way for impulses of growth, and for the flowering of my academic and administrative colleagues. And I, most of all, was astonished by the results. Enthusiasm soon developed into deserved confidence. As those at GW grew accustomed to its new levels of national and international recognition, good ideas multiplied on a campus-wide basis. And at a time when all academic institutions were becoming increasingly cost-conscious, the need to fully justify even a modest expenditure of funds seemed not to interfere with individual creativity and the power of innovation.

Today, we have grown used to the idea that GW is a role model for American higher education. Its concern for its community – the District of Columbia – smoothly coexists with its mission of intellectual and scholarly accomplishment. The University welcomes students from every part of our country and nearly every nation of our planet. Even a glance at our achievements suggests that those affiliated with GW perceive the University as a medium for their own careers and their own endeavors.

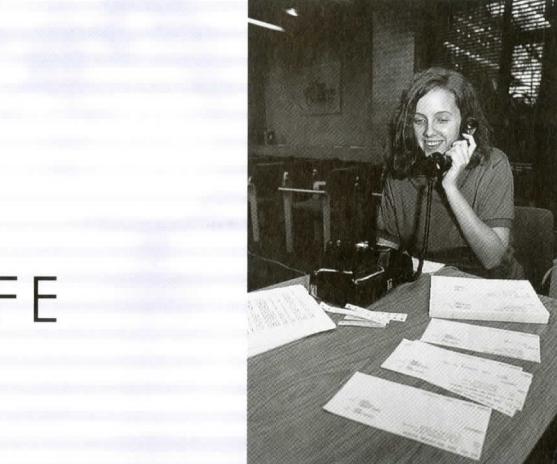

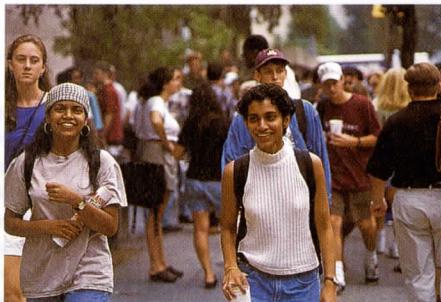

In the pages that follow, you will find more than “a glance.” We offer for your review a portfolio that commemorates GW’s present moment, as we all approach a new century and a new millennium. What GW will grow into as this new period in human history develops is in some ways uncertain. What seems definite, however, is that its future growth will be even more impressive than its past development. To turn each new ceiling into a platform, to rethink all past accomplishments in the quest for new ones, to remain sensitive to global needs without losing sight of regional and local responsibilities – this can be called, without exaggeration, the spirit of The George Washington University. I am very proud to be its president and to serve in that office as GW moves toward the fulfillment of its destiny.

STUDENT LIFE

To say that students come first in all of our thinking at GW may seem like a truism. But in a nation so deeply concerned with postsecondary education, and with classroom teaching in particular, that which is obvious may also need articulation. I myself cannot cross the GW campus without noticing the enthusiasm on the faces of the students I pass. Meanwhile, the steady growth in the number of applications received by GW from potential students suggests that the relentlessness of our attention to student life is receiving a more-than-ample reward.

Architecture "makes" a campus in one sense, but students bring architecture to life as well as life to architecture. Together, they are the "GW scene."

The "student cycle" never seems more complete to me than at the time when our upperclassmen play their roles in the admissions process as Student Admissions Representatives. Here we see one of them phoning congratulations to a newly admitted high school senior.

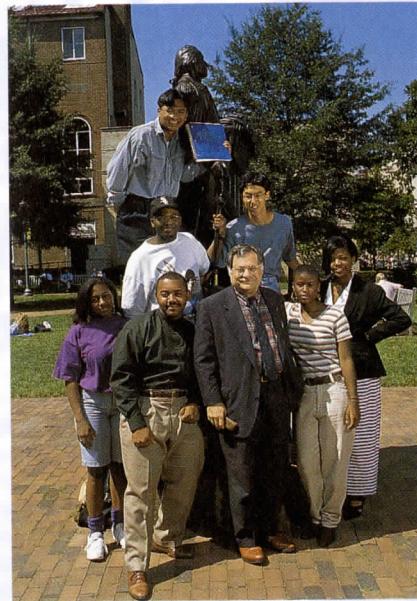

GW's Solar Car has ranked as a student accomplishment of the first order ever since it won the 1996 World Solar Rally in Akita, Japan, defeating world-class competition.

GW's Colonial Inauguration has earned high praise as an orientation experience for new students and their families. I regularly get mail telling me how valuable it is.

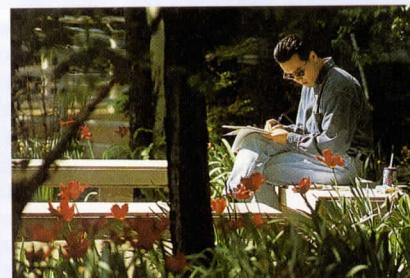

Joy + warmth + smiles + occasional enthusiastic shouts = Commencement Day, of course.

The University's powerful commitment to the District of Columbia is summed up by the 21st Century Scholars Program, which provides full, four-year scholarships to outstanding graduates of Washington's public high schools.

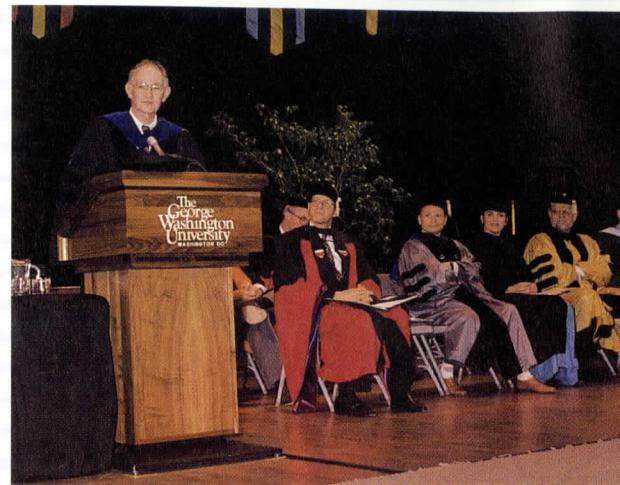

These law students started out in Eastern Europe and ended up at The George Washington University. Programs like the one that brought them here are among the reasons our name is known around the globe.

Turning the GW campus into a garden of flowers can be justified in all kinds of ways. But for me, the sight of a student drinking in knowledge amid an explosion of color and fragrance is a sight that's self-sustaining!

FACULTY ACCOMPLISHMENTS

When a university faculty reaches out in as many directions as GW's, and its achievements are regularly noted in the print and electronic as well as the scholarly media, a president can indeed be proud. Yes, our faculty members are pervasively active and committed people. Yes, they take both teaching and research with the highest degree of seriousness. And yes, they make good use of their Washington base — not least in studying the District of Columbia itself, which sums up so many of the challenges facing urban America today. Above all, GW's faculty is characterized by a strong commitment to scholarship and teaching.

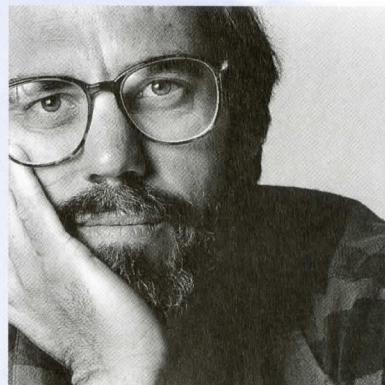

The caps and gowns are eternally quaint. But among the characteristics that distinguish GW's faculty members is their immersion in the scholarly here-and-now as well as their dedication to University service. Former history professor and associate dean Peter Hill, now the University Historian, was recognized for this with the Trachtenberg Prize for University Service in 1995.

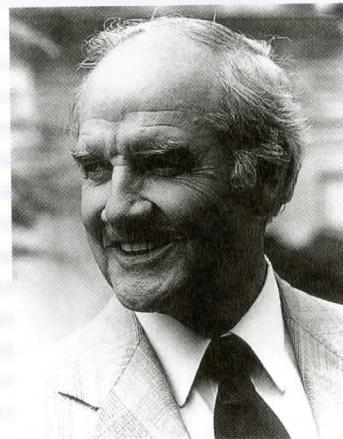

Lilien Robinson (left) represents the study of art history at GW. She also represents her fellow teachers and scholars in her role as chairperson of the Faculty Senate Executive Committee.

James M. Clark is GW's Ronald B. Weintraub Assistant Professor of Biological Sciences. The number of endowed chairs and professorships at GW has risen since 1988 from 30 to 60.

Steve Roberts, formerly a senior editor at U.S. News & World Report, started out at GW as a visiting professor. He is now our J.B. and Maurice C. Shapiro Professor of Media and Public Affairs.

A common remark heard from visitors to GW is that they "see all these famous people on the campus." Many of them are teaching here. A recent example was former South Dakota Senator George McGovern.

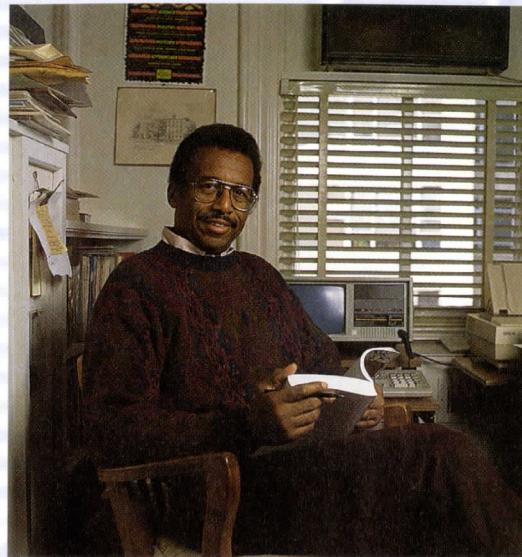

W. Burlette Carter is an associate professor of law who teaches Evidence and Civil Procedure. She is also the chair-elect of the Association of American Law Schools' section on Law and Sports.

Carl Stern, when he was my fellow student at Columbia, seemed destined to accomplish some notable things in his life. One of them turned out to be the position of J.B. and Maurice C. Shapiro Professor of Journalism at GW!

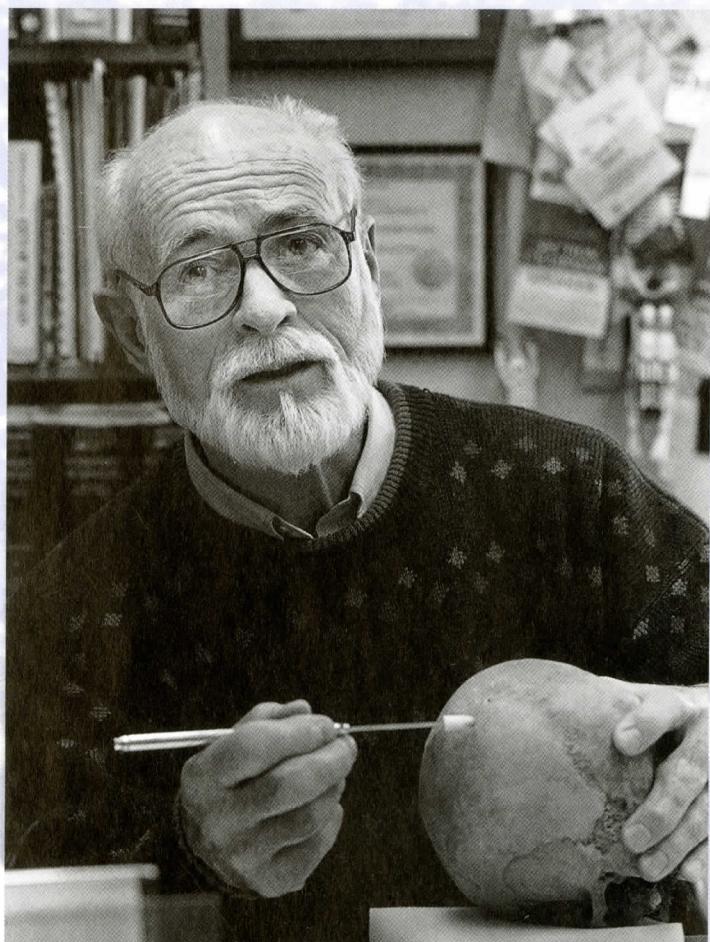

James O. Horton, professor of American history and civilization at GW, has been awarded a Trachtenberg Prize in recognition of his excellent teaching, and has been selected by the Carnegie Foundation as CASE Professor of the Year for the District of Columbia.

In addition to serving as an associate professor in GW's School of Engineering and Applied Science, C. Dianne Martin is president of the Recreational Software Advisory Council. In terms of nationwide professorial pay scales, GW now ranks with "Research I" universities, enabling us to attract and retain the best scholars and teachers.

FACULTY ACCOMPLISHMENTS

James Starrs is a professor of law and forensic sciences. His specialty is that of a "detective." He uses modern technology and personal skill to uncover literally buried facts relating to previously unsolved investigations.

Susan Tolchin is a professor of public administration in the School of Business and Public Management. In addition to publishing her most recent, well-received book, The Angry American, she is an expert on global markets.

GW now routinely attracts its "first choice" in faculty searches. Having been drawn to GW by a search of this kind, Dean Harry Harding of the Elliott School of International Affairs now helps to administer comparable procedures for those seeking faculty positions.

Alison Brooks' renown as an anthropologist has earned her a Trachtenberg Prize in Scholarship as well as a fellowship from the American Council of Learned Societies.

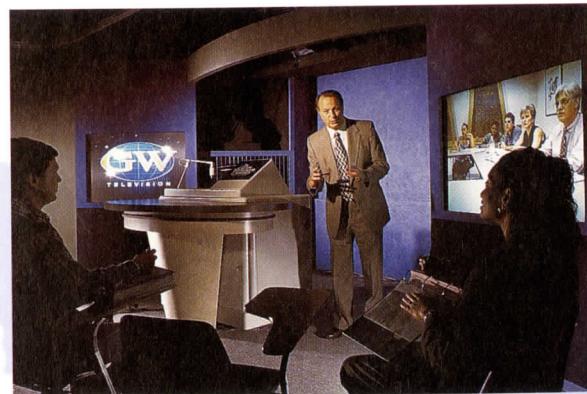

The electronic influence in modern higher education is neatly symbolized by the GWizard Kiosks on campus, which enable students to call up, instantly, all kinds of information that is relevant to their status and studies.

TECHNOLOGY'S GROWING INFLUENCE

There is a sense in which all of our schools of higher education, and many primary and secondary schools as well, are engaged in a kind of "technology race." Increasingly, they base much of their appeal on references to fiber-optic cable and computer terminals. But as the internal deliberations of such schools make clear, the profoundest technological effort is the struggle for balance rather than an effort to simply "add" technology.

One response to our nation's growing interest in distance education: GW's Distance Learning Lab. Here, Assistant Vice President Ted Christensen demonstrates this state-of-the-art multimedia studio. The lab permits students and guests from around the world to interact — live — with students and faculty on campus.

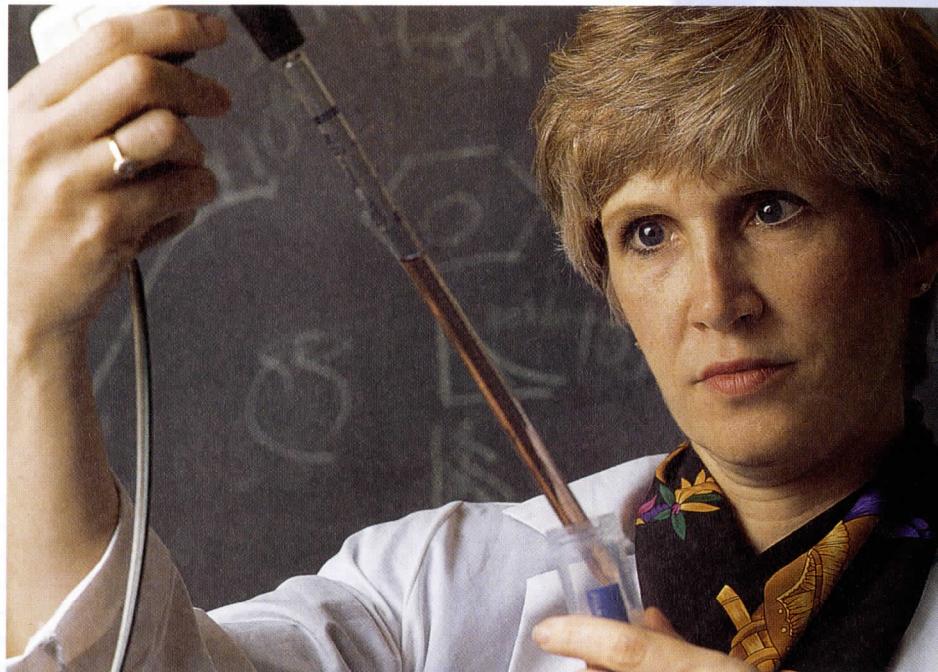

THE PURSUIT OF KNOWLEDGE

Quite a few books and articles have been written on the relationship between good teaching and good research. What they boil down to is that a teacher who communicates with students on the subject of the "knowledge frontier" in his or her field should be well-acquainted with that frontier. This presumes that he or she is actively digging into the tumultuous world of possibility just beyond current settled wisdom on the subjects being taught in the classroom. There is much about the District of Columbia that favors the dialectical relationship between teaching and research. Billions of dollars in federal appropriations or federal cutbacks may be rooted in what scholars have determined to be a new and sometimes unexpected truth.

GW's Virginia Campus houses high-tech research equipment used by University faculty and students. The test shown above is being conducted in the campus' Center for Structural Dynamics Research.

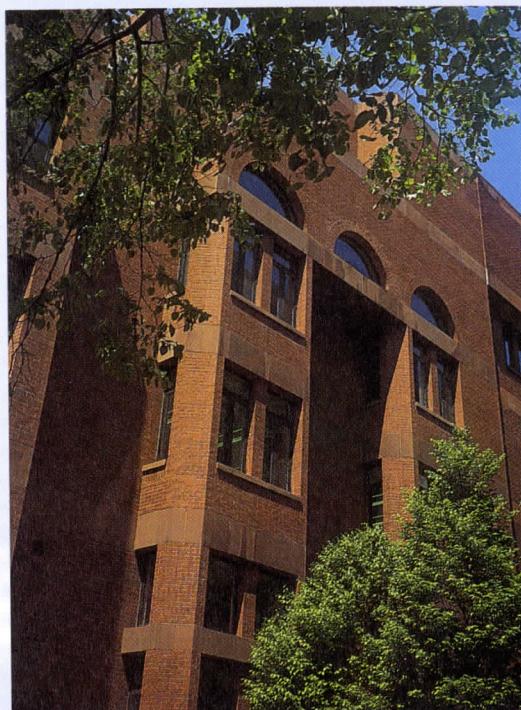

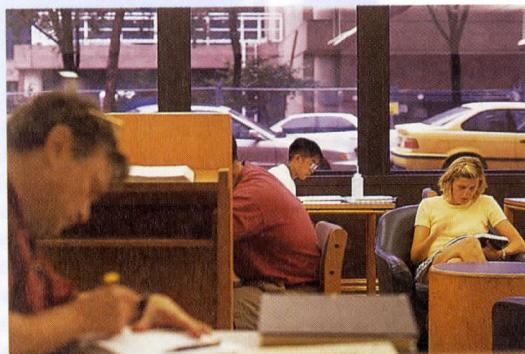

Team members doing National Crash Analysis Center research demonstrate how they digitize vehicles in order to prepare them for computer modeling and simulation of crash tests.

At GW, our concern with student life and faculty accomplishments dovetails with our determination to sustain GW's traditional book-centered libraries. They must be places that are easily available at convenient hours — and places that use information technology to make their holdings as accessible as possible.

LIBRARIES

One of our proudest additions to Gelman Library is its 24-Hour Reading Room, which can meet the needs of even those students whose minds work best between three and four in the morning.

An enduring legacy from GW benefactor Jacob Burns is the Law School library named in his honor.

As a university president, I am eternally torn between two thoughts on the subject of GW's capital endowment: How hard we all must work in order to keep it growing (which in turn enables the University to keep developing), and how grateful we are to the donors who have facilitated "the GW miracle."

THE SUBJECT IS MONEY

As a GW student and later as a faculty member, Robert L. Weintraub dedicated his career and his life to the University. Endowments from him and his wife, Frances — who also graduated from GW — have had an enormous impact on the advancement of our Biological Sciences Department.

The trustees of the J.B. and Maurice C. Shapiro Trust, when they gathered for this photograph, were smiling with good reason. The Shapiro Trust is one of the largest benefactors in the University's history.

When I had my picture taken with the late Jacob Burns, my pleased expression was a comment on his significant contributions to the development of the University, and our law school in particular. His benevolence included the Jacob Burns Law Library, the Jacob Burns Fellowships, and the Jacob Burns Legal Clinics.

It's not enough to say that GW is in Washington, and that it's concerned about Washington. During the past decade, we've made a major effort to bring Washington into GW — our Ambassadors Lecture Series being just one example. In this photograph, Sir Robin Renwick, the British ambassador to the United States, converses with GW faculty and students.

The presence of world-renowned figures like First Lady Hillary Rodham Clinton draws GW students into the Washington scene. Students thus are able to see a meaningful connection between their classroom work and the world stage on which they will be pursuing their own careers.

GLOBAL INTERSECTION FOR SUBSTANCE AND STYLE

When U.S. Health and Human Services Secretary Donna Shalala appears on campus, her remarks influence those teaching and studying in every field from medicine and law to public management and communications.

The ancient and now outmoded concept of the "Ivy Tower" was a way of summing up a university's removal from mundane concerns. Today at GW we are far more aware of just how complex a relationship there is between academic concerns and "the world out there." This point is made on an everyday basis by the many national and international figures who appear in our classrooms and lecture halls. The sheer liveliness of the University owes much to their presence.

Distinguished Visiting Scholar Marvin Kalb, seen here in GW's Dorothy Betts Marvin Theatre as he conducts a televised "Kalb Report," is one of the major journalists/scholars who has formed an ongoing connection with GW.

President Bill Clinton came to GW's Lisner Auditorium in August 1996 to deliver a speech decrying terrorism and announcing new measures to reduce its threat. We shared a moment of good humor when I was in the process of introducing him.

The George Washington University Hospital received global attention when it helped to save President Ronald Reagan's life following an assassination attempt. On the tenth anniversary of that occasion, the former president and Mrs. Reagan returned to the GW campus.

Václav Havel of the Czech Republic received the University's first President's Medal in 1993. We created the President's Medal to honor the achievements of outstanding individuals.

GW has served as the host site for major policy addresses, including one by Vice President Al Gore at the Conference on Climate Action in 1994.

GW's 175th Anniversary Convocation featured, among others, tennis great Martina Navratilova, who received an honorary degree.

When the Bush-Gorbachev Summit was held in 1990, GW served as the Press Center for the occasion, with the Charles E. Smith Center transformed into its headquarters. Secretary of State James Baker, seen in this photograph, was one of those who addressed the assembled journalists.

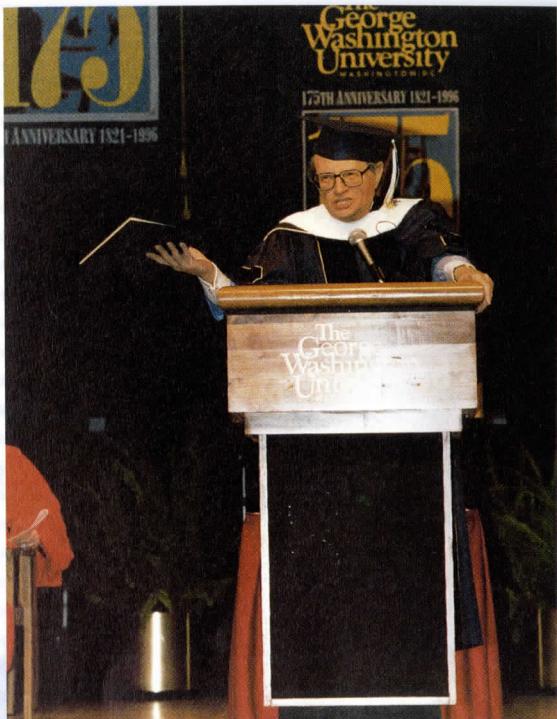

When Abba Eban, former Ambassador of Israel and J.B. and Maurice C. Shapiro Professor of International Affairs at GW, held a dialogue with Walter Cronkite, it exemplified what soon became a "typical GW occasion."

Among those who have taken part in GW's Ambassadors Lecture Series was Ambassador Eduardo MacGillycuddy of Uruguay, who spoke in 1993.

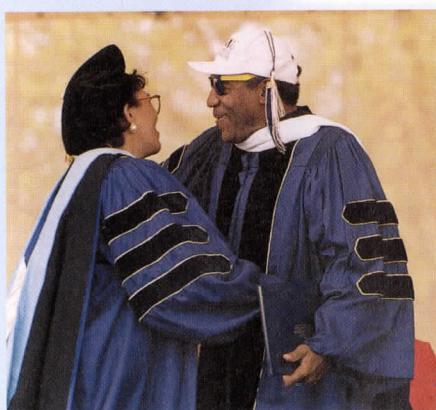

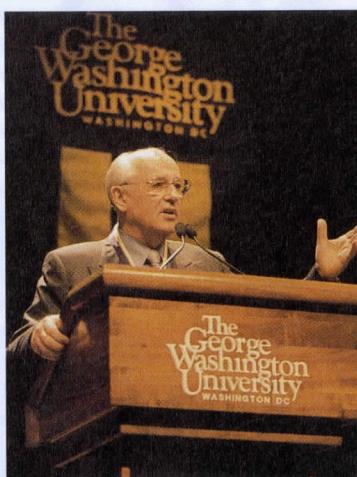

Having done so well as the Press Center for the Bush-Gorbachev Summit, GW was chosen to serve as the Press Center for the 1992 Clinton/Gore Inauguration. George Stephanopoulos is shown answering questions from reporters.

True to its reputation as a school that creatively blends historical with contemporary perspectives, GW bestowed an honorary degree on Larry King at its 175th Anniversary Convocation.

More recently, Bill Cosby addressed the University's graduating students on Commencement Day, 1997. He is shown here embracing our Graduate School of Education and Human Development Dean Mary Hatwood Futrell.

When Mikhail Gorbachev delivered an address at GW in 1997, our students crowded into Lisner Auditorium to hear him. I am very proud of the University's reputation as a school where history truly comes alive.

At GW, our program of maintenance, renovation, and new construction has been one of the most ambitious in American higher education. If we think of the campus as a platform for the launching of intellectual accomplishment, we will understand why so much effort has gone into making that platform as solid and as beautiful as possible.

THE BLOOMING OF AN URBAN CAMPUS

Where the University's physical facilities are concerned, an ambitious program of maintenance and improvement is now the order of the day. It has made GW a more attractive place while also serving the needs of both faculty members and students. Seen in the photograph is Lisner Auditorium, a major, newly renovated facility for campus events.

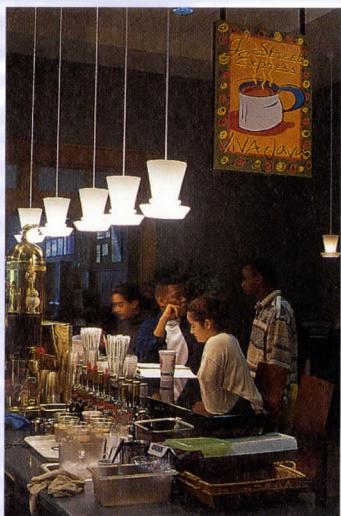

GW's new residence hall is often described in terms of "unexpected glory." Not only does it reverse a current axiom about American higher education — that "the days of new residence halls ended half a century ago" — but it has added to the campus a handsome and beautifully proportioned building whose interior spaces are equally attractive.

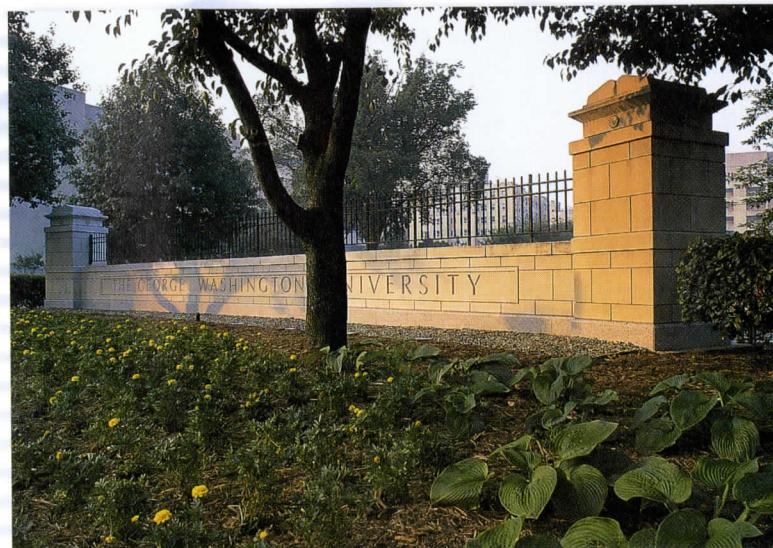

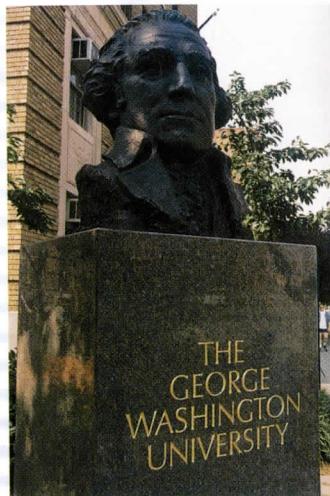

And for those living in the new GW residence hall, fully equipped kitchens will be as tempting as any restaurant.

Where exactly to have lunch or dinner is a question that confronts not only students and faculty members but every visitor to the GW campus. One solution: the Marvin Center's J Street cafes.

Other corners of the campus feature dramatic busts of George Washington, like this one.

Here's a challenge that many people would find rather daunting: Take a university that prides itself on being in the very center of our nation's capital and provide it with its own sense of geographical identity. Well, we're trying! This photograph shows the new University gateway at Washington Circle, completed in 1997.

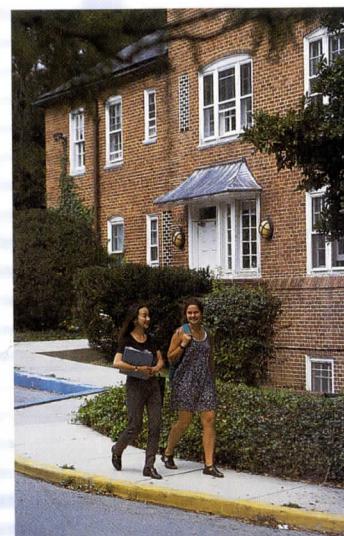

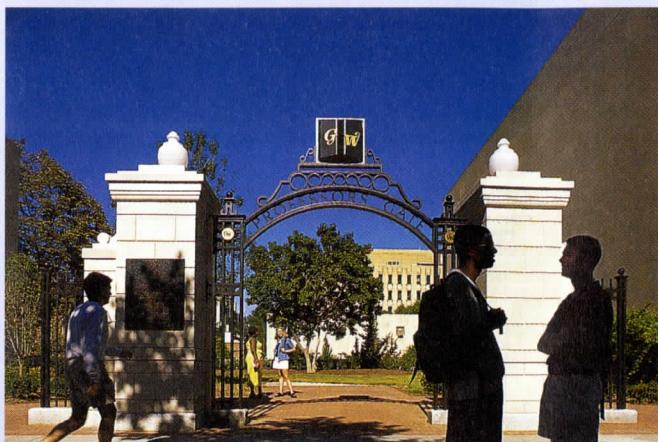

Visitors to GW, as they approach the nearby Metro station, just happen to pass through the University's Eye Street Park. We hope that GW will be associated in their minds forever with flowers and trees.

In 1996, a historic move broadened the scope of the University and its campus when GW and Mount Vernon College for Women announced their affiliation.

Members of the GW family sometimes need help with their families. This, in turn, has led the University to arrange for the presence near campus of a Bright Horizons Children's Center.

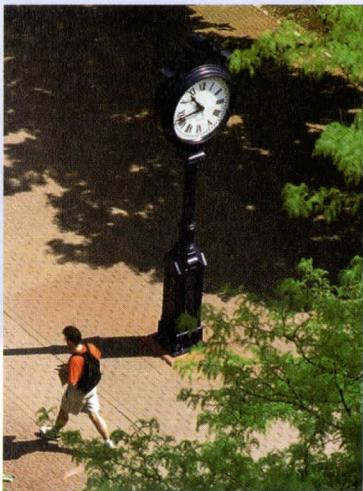

Professors Gate is a very recent addition to the GW campus. It has symbolic as well as literal value, summing up the transitions through which students pass at the University.

THE BLOOMING OF AN URBAN CAMPUS

One of our goals at GW has been to give it the kinds of landmarks that help to organize one's perceptions of the campus. The Gelman Clock is a good example.

Facilities like the outdoor basketball courts help our students lead balanced and satisfying lives.

The computer lab at the Law School is one example of the University's electronic facilities. A program now under way is aimed at developing a digital infrastructure that will meet our students' needs well into the 21st century.

"Outreach" has several meanings at GW, resulting from University programs at the local, regional, national, and international levels. Seen in this photograph: Yolanda King addressing the Martin Luther King Convocation in 1994.

REACHING OUT TO THE COMMUNITY

Since 1988, GW has enhanced its longstanding relationship with the Washington, D.C., community. Students participate in outreach efforts, through internship programs, community legal and medical clinics, and individual involvement on the part of scores of students who clean up neighborhoods, plant trees, build houses, and otherwise volunteer their time to make their temporary hometown a better place for all the residents of the capital city.

"Outreach" also connotes GW's ongoing efforts to develop positive relationships with its Foggy Bottom neighbors. Here, Vice President Louis Katz and I are seen conversing with neighborhood residents one evening after a community meeting.

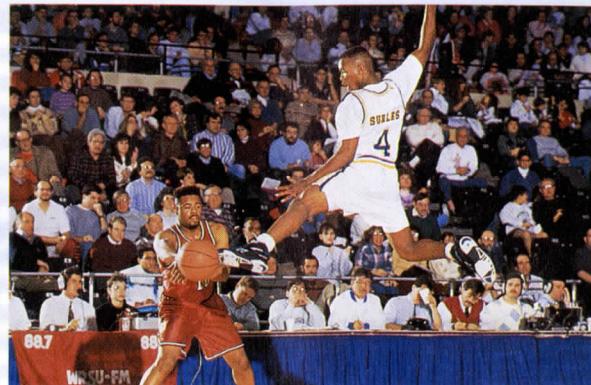

The University's United Way campaign has achieved a sterling reputation. For more than 10 years, GW has received the United Way University Award for being "at the top of the class" among District of Columbia universities.

When GW became a "Green University," our agreement with the Environmental Protection Agency expressed GW's concern with regard to our planet and its future. This photograph shows me listening to remarks by EPA Administrator Carol Browner.

This visit with Maudine Cooper of the Washington Urban League, where I serve on the board of directors, reflects GW's keen involvement in all aspects of the District's life.

GW's men's basketball teams have enjoyed winning seasons for the past six years. Students are pleased and sometimes exhilarated as GW — now a "player" in intercollegiate athletics — continues to work toward winning championships.

SPIRIT

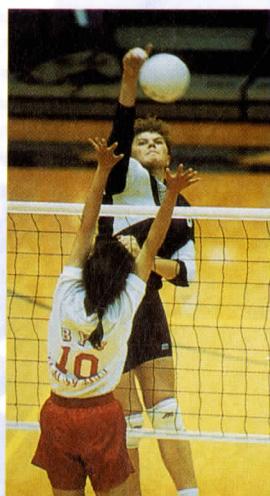

Those who visit GW often comment on the great enthusiasm they encounter. And — why not? Those who work and study at GW are, arguably, in one of the world's loveliest cities. World-class art, music, and sports of all kinds are always close at hand. Luminaries from the worlds of politics, entertainment, and the arts are frequent visitors to campus. Then there is the almost miracle rebirth of GW sports. Finally, a student's GW experience is capped on commencement day with a festive celebration on the Ellipse between the White House and the Washington Monument. It just doesn't get any better than this.

Coach Mike Jarvis tunes up his team.

Women's volleyball at GW has earned championship titles year after year.

School spirit received a major boost from our 175th Anniversary celebration, which brought home to us that GW is the product of efforts dating back to the presidency of James Monroe. In this photograph, taken at the anniversary year's Opening Convocation, I join in applauding our splendid school.

When I found myself sitting beside the Clintons at a GW basketball game, I couldn't escape the thought: "This would be a nice one to win." We did!

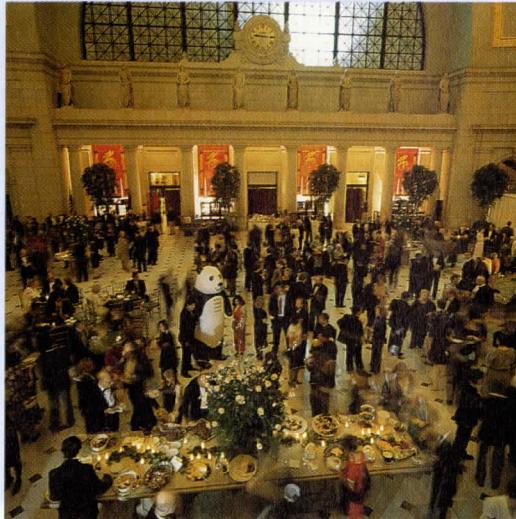

It's becoming harder and harder to remember a time when GW students had less to cheer about than these basketball fans.

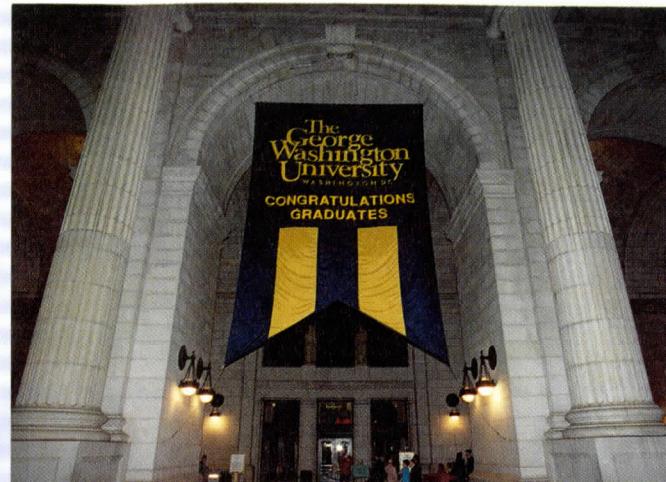

As women's basketball takes on greater national prominence, GW's team is ready for attention. In the past year, the Colonial women went to the NCAA "Elite Eight."

SPIRIT

When GW held its 175th Anniversary party, a birthday cake was, of course, part of the festivities.

Union Station is big enough for the biggest GW parties — and a setting worthy of the University's present stature.

Union Station in Washington is a monument that often strikes people as reminiscent of ancient Rome. It has also become the site for monumental GW events like our night-before-Commencement celebration.

When I donated it to the University, I didn't expect the buzz that would be created by our new bronze Hippo. Even the Washington Post took notice of this new addition to our campus. Meanwhile, the Hippo seems to be finding its way into "campus culture."

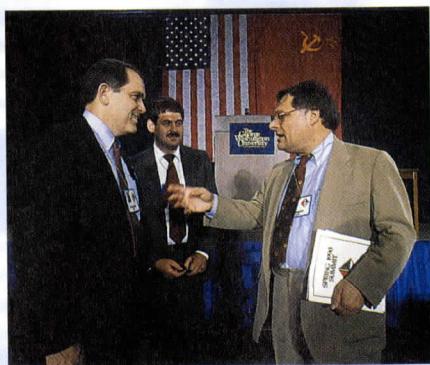

The University's connections with George Washington represent a "force in their own right." In addition to its name and its bronze busts, GW keeps up the connection on special occasions like its 175th Anniversary. Here, a lantern lighted at Washington's home — Mount Vernon — begins its trip to the campus.

When I'm not shoveling out my in-box and answering my phone-calls, I try hard to "get myself out." Students, I learn again and again, have a lot to teach me.

THE UNIVERSITY PRESIDENT AS EVERYMAN

Half a century ago, university presidents often looked like distant captains on the bridge of an ocean liner. You knew they were there, but it wasn't often that you met them in the boiler room. Today, the job has undergone a sea change. University presidents are highly visible and mobile, both on campus and, indeed, around the world — looking after the University's interests at home and abroad.

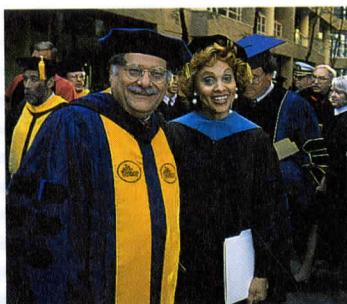

When a newspaper or TV station wants to sum GW up in a single image, the camera's lens is sometimes aimed at me. But that, thank heaven, is only an image. The job of a university president requires teamwork on the part of a university-wide staff. I'm aided, advised, and supported by such people as Vice President Walter Bortz (left) and Mike Peller (center), then director of the Smith Center. The three of us are seen here as we inspect the Bush-Gorbachev Press Center at GW's Smith Center.

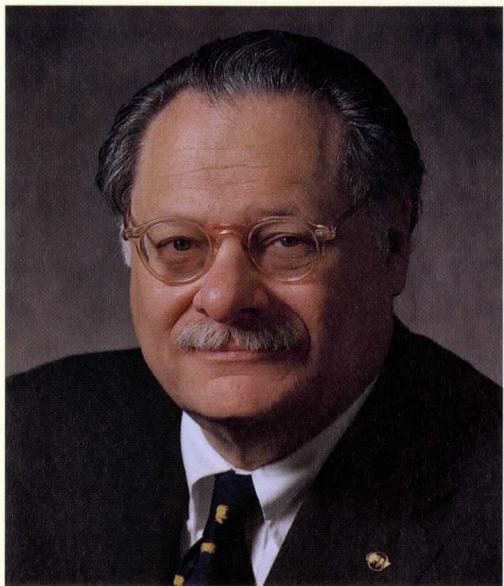

GW's new campus in Northern Virginia has added an enormous amount to the life of the University, including several programs that are unique to its campus.

The theme appears more and more often in the academic media: today's member of a university's board of trustees is expected to be an activist and a participator rather than a figurehead. In this photo, I am on the Ellipse celebrating our Commencement with the chairman of our Board of Trustees, John Zeglis, (right) and D.C. Councilman Frank Smith.

A question that every school of higher education must face: Are alumni children and grandchildren coming? Which in turn explains my pleasure at conversing with alumna Sandra Holley, whose son is now a GW undergraduate.

In the preceding pages, my own running commentary has been kept to a minimum, so as to interfere as little as possible with what adds up to a “vision” of GW today. I hope that vision provides you with as much pleasure as it has given me!

The city of Washington is too seldom thought of as a “university town,” though it contains – and is surrounded by – its share of academic institutions. But what this year’s annual report conveys, I hope, is that GW has created, just a few blocks from the White House, a campus that is fully urban and yet the very opposite of ugly. In care of design, in assiduity of maintenance, it makes the very best of its location. Meanwhile, everything that meets the eye is in the service of an “academic engine” that continues to provide the world with first-rate education, first-rate research, and a spectrum of important services.

In my private moments, I often think of GW as a kind of symphony. So many separate instruments still collude in the creation of an overriding musical idea. We are part of it. We help to shape it. And what we have shaped then plays a role in what we ourselves become. May this marriage of architecture and function continue to work for centuries to come!

STUDENT AND ACADEMIC SUPPORT SERVICES

There is no question that GW today, through the investment of significant human and financial resources, has energized itself into a more mature, preferred, and dynamic institution than had been in place in 1988. The George Washington University has had an insatiable desire during the Trachtenberg era to reach its full potential. Student and Academic Support Services has contributed to improving GW's external reputation and the quality of the overall life experience of our students. Our unit is making headway by increasing productivity, expanding programs and services, and reshaping the priority of work and focus within student affairs, enrollment management, and athletics to sustain the momentum of instilling pride, quality, and satisfaction within the University community. The following is a look at where we are now, contrasted at times with our status in 1988, to show how far we have come.

ADMISSIONS

For the first time in the University's history, the admit rate will be 49 percent—finally breaking the 50 percent barrier. Our acceptance rate for the entering class of 2001 is significantly lower than the admit rate of 78 percent in 1988. Furthermore, our freshman class represents all 50 states and is comprised of 50 valedictorians. Not to be overlooked was the most fortunate occurrence, which happened late in September 1996 when students were selecting schools to which they wanted to apply. In U.S. News & World Report's 1996 college ranking edition, GW moved upward to the number 46 slot in the first tier rankings for national universities.

ADMISSIONS

	FY 1988	FY 1997
High School Visits:
States visited	18	40
Schools visited	249	1,176
Students seen	1,782	5,982
College Programs:
States covered	22	40
Programs attended	171	359
Students seen	10,193	27,797

Notes:

- Interestingly, during the last 10 years, the average number of students seen at a high school visit declined from seven students per visit in 1988 to five students per visit in 1997. This decrease has been influenced by the attempt of high schools to restrict students from being excused from class for such visits. High schools have, therefore, relied more heavily on college programs in order for students to meet with college representatives. Thus, we have seen an increase in the average number of students we see at college programs from 60 in 1988 to 78 in 1997.

The Alumni Admissions Program has been in existence for more than 10 years. In 1988, we had 291 participants in 35 states, in 1997, we had over 900 participants in 45 states, the District of Columbia, and Puerto Rico, as well as in 12 countries outside the United States.

Inquiries	33,687	80,969
Applications	6,389	12,408 *
Percentage of applicants accepted	78%	49%
Registered full-time freshmen	1,056	1,690

Notes:

- Prior to the opening of the Visitor's Center in 1989, group information sessions and tours were conducted from the second floor of Rice Hall. Because of limited space, visitors were required to schedule their appointments and would be turned away during peak periods. Since the opening of the Visitor's Center, we have been able to do away with the scheduling of appointments, have expanded our visitor capacity to 100 students per group session, and have increased the number of Saturdays that we welcome visitors.

*Reflects applications received in 1977 for Fall 1977 admittance.

Climbing into the rankings of the nation's top 50 universities certainly has been the proper exclamation point to a banner year in the University's history.

A record number of applications (more than 12,400) were received during the past year, which will result in a freshman class of approximately 1,700 students. This is quite an increase from 1988, when we received 6,389 applications.

The freshman applicant pool, as well as the committed pool, represents a more diverse population. To date, it appears that 23 percent of GW's population will be made up of students from ethnic minority groups, an increase of 11 percent from 1988. A portion of the increase in applications was a result of an elevation in international applications. This growth allowed us to admit higher quality international students.

The freshman applicant pool was also of a stronger caliber, which ultimately resulted in the highest quality ever for the entering freshman class. The percentage of freshmen in the top 10 percent of their class increased from 22 percent in 1988 to 45 percent in 1997, and students in the top 20 percent of their class rose from 41 percent in 1988 to 77 percent in 1997. The combined SAT average increased, and the number of national merit finalists, national achievement finalists, and national Hispanic scholars climbed from six in 1988 to 59 in 1997.

STUDENT FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE

GW's ability to be a "hot" school enabled us to control the student financial aid expenditures while reaching our enrollment goals. Since the 1994-95 academic year when our discount rate was running 41.1 percent, preliminary indications are that we will end this fiscal year slightly below 36.5 percent. Our efforts have been successful in bringing the discount rate below the recommendations set by the Board of Trustees, while at the same time experiencing an increase in the academic quality of our freshman class.

Total financial aid expenditures, including federal funds, were $21.6 million in 1988, and $95.2 million in 1997. The average GW merit award this year was $7,455, compared with $4,423 in 1988, and the average need-based award was $9,965, compared with 1988's $4,984.

In 1988, we had 2,899 freshman visitors, compared to 13,678 in 1997. These numbers do not include the number of special groups that visit us each year.

- The Student Admissions Representative (STAR) Program has been of great assistance in helping the University to manage the increased admissions activity. In 1988, the number of students volunteering for the STAR Program numbered 60; in 1997, the number of volunteers increased to 120.
- We continued to offer a special spring visit program for admitted students. In 1988, we saw 673 students of which 65 percent deposited. In 1997, 924 students attended (an all-time high), with a yield continuing to be 65 percent.
- Interviews for freshmen, both on and off campus, were first offered in 1995. In 1997, we interviewed 1,079 students. Also, we hosted 117 applicants in our overnight host program.
- In 1988, we were on a rolling admission schedule with an application deadline of February 1. Most application files were completed in March and April. In 1997, we had a two-part application and a single decision date; and most freshman files were completed by February 1. Also, early decision was not offered in 1988. In 1997, early decision accounted for approximately 15 percent of our projected entering class.

CAMPUS LIFE

The past year in residential life has been an exciting one. More students were accommodated in the residence halls than ever before. New Hall, our new "ground-up" apartment-style residence hall, houses approximately 440 students, allowing GW to accommodate 56.9 percent of our undergraduate students in residence halls.

For those students who make the choice to live off campus, GW provides the Off-Campus Housing Resource Center, which in 1988 was a modest walk-in service providing maps and a list of apartments. The center's services have expanded and include 10 computer terminals for students to conduct computerized searches for off-campus accommodations. During the last academic year at the time of the writing of this report, students made 2,542 contacts for off-campus rentals.

Student and Academic Support Services continued taking a leadership role in efforts to develop a sense of campus community among students, and to visibly demonstrate the University's commitment to being a "good neighbor" in the District of Columbia. The Office of Community Service in 1997 involved more than 575 students each semester who participated in 95 projects. Their volunteerism amounted to more than 75,000 hours of service to more than 25,000 District of Columbia residents.

Campus Life has also been more aggressive in gaining grants to support outreach efforts. In 1997, more than $210,000 in grants had been awarded to support community service and academic service-learning programs on campus. The Office of Community Service currently engages 20 faculty members in six colleges of the University in community service-learning projects.

The University remains committed to creating and maintaining a coherent institutional policy regarding parental issues. During the past year, the number of active members in the Parents' Association grew to more than 600 families, with many members becoming actively involved in a variety of University programs and services such as Colonial Inauguration, admissions recruiting, move-in day into the residence halls, and Family Weekend. Colonial Inauguration, initiated in 1989, became a national award-winning freshman orientation program for students and their families. Last year, we had an attendance of more than 3,000.

CAREER CENTER SERVICES

Of growing interest to Student and Academic Support Services is gathering contemporary information about how students live their lives here at GW. The unit's Office of Enrollment Research and Retention expanded its research efforts to learn more about our undergraduate students' involvement in experiential learning activities (internships, cooperative education, or voluntary service) or paid employment during their undergraduate careers. This research showed that four out of five undergraduates have been involved in at least one experiential learning activity or paid employment. Only 16 percent have not worked nor participated in any of these activities. Survey results also revealed the fact that involvement in work, internships, or voluntary service appear to have a beneficial effect on student grade point averages. Those students involved in at least one experience earned significantly higher grades than those who were not involved in any job or experiential learning activity.

Students seeking involvement in these activities can consult the Career Center. The center, which provides comprehensive one-stop shopping for students, alumni, and employers by integrating student employment, cooperative education, and career services, has seen students use more than double since 1988. In 1997, the Career Center conducted more than 3,000 scheduled and drop-in consulting sessions, compared with 1,031 in 1988. Attendance at 103 special career-related programs numbered 6,274, and more than 8,000 visits were recorded in the career resource room, which houses 1,300 directories and texts. In 1997, 206,259 full-time jobs, 3,606 summer and part-time jobs, and 7,221 internships were listed with the Career Center. The Colonial Connection, the alumni career network, numbered more than 1,000 participants.

The office coordinated a record 657 cooperative education placements. Students collectively earned more than $4 million while working for 243 employers, including Bell Atlantic, GE Information Services, IBM, MCI, Mobil Corporation, and the U.S. Department of State. In the student employment area, 284 work-study employers listed 1,342 jobs for eligible students, 867 work-study students accepted positions earning the group slightly more than $1.3 million. The student employment staff also interacted with 1,525 part-time employers who hired 1,380 students, earning them $3.1 million. On the technology side, the Career Center's World Wide Web site received more than 77,700 hits; and 23,053 visits were recorded on JOBTRAK, an online 24-hour job listing service operated in partnership with more than 650 universities nationwide.

Another opportunity for graduating seniors wishing to continue their education at GW and earn professional experience is the Presidential Administrative Fellows Program. In 1989, President Trachtenberg, initiated this program to provide professional opportunities for graduating seniors while they continue their graduate-level studies. In addition to an increasing number of applicants, the program is also experiencing greater demand from University departments to host a fellow. For the first time in the program's history, more offices expressed interest in hosting a fellow than we had students selected for the program. Additionally, for the first time, a Presidential Administrative Fellow will be interning off campus, in the office of District of Columbia Councilmember Jack Evans.

DISABILITY SUPPORT SERVICES

While the University continues dramatic advancement in attracting better qualified undergraduate students, the Office of Disability Support Services accommodated a greater number of disabled students. In 1997, 497 students with disabilities were served, compared with 159 in 1988. Those served include students with disabilities in mobility/dexterity, vision, and hearing impairments, as well as non-visible disabilities such as learning disabilities/cognitive disorders, attention deficit disorders, medical/psychological impairments, and diagnostic referrals.

ATHLETICS

The 17 men's and women's intercollegiate athletic teams had increasingly outstanding years, both athletically and academically. This year, our women's soccer program made its first-ever NCAA tournament appearance, while the women's basketball program made it to the "Elite 8" in the NCAA basketball tournament—the best showing for a GW team ever in an NCAA tournament. The women's gymnastic team also earned a spot at the NCAA regionals with a sixth-place finish.

GW was well represented among league academic honors by placing 105 student athletes on the 1996-97 Atlantic 10 Commissioner's Honor Roll (minimum 3.0 yearly GPA). Additionally, 63 percent of the 298 students who participated in intercollegiate athletics made the athletic director's honor roll (3.0 minimum GPA per semester).

Attendance at GW games has increased over the years. An average of 4,365 fans attended each of the men's basketball home games, almost a full-house! Attendance at women's basketball home games has increased as well. In 1988, attendance averaged 331—it's now up to 1,334.

When our students aren't watching the games live in the Smith Center, they can catch many of them on television. In 1997, a total of 20 GW men's and women's basketball games were televised—11 nationally.

ACADEMIC AFFAIRS

Accomplishments in Academic Affairs since 1988 have played a major role in GW's strides toward becoming a premiere undergraduate and graduate institution. The University made impressive advances in the areas of student quality and diversity, student services, faculty scholarship, curriculum, infrastructure, and external affairs. All of this is inextricably linked with the increase in positive national recognition that led to GW's inclusion in the top 50 colleges and universities as reported by U.S. News and World Report in 1996.

The impact that better qualified students have on curriculum is illustrated by more rigorous and innovative course offerings. Improvements in technology infrastructure further enhance the learning environment as modern software approaches to learning are incorporated into the classroom experience. To give students the opportunity to take full advantage of the course offerings available, student advising and first-year introductory courses have taken on a whole new dimension at GW.

The increasing value of generating and maintaining relationships with the external community is fully recognized, and schools have increased their efforts in this area. The regular interaction among the deans and administrators within Academic Affairs allows for collaborative planning. The Council of Deans and the Graduate Enrollment Management Committee are examples of forums that facilitate a cooperative approach to common goals. Our administrative units are working with the schools to meet the changing needs of our students and society, while maintaining the integrity of our traditional academic programs. From instructional technology to off-campus programs to increased research activity, we are changing and growing in ways that will help us continue attracting quality students and preparing those students for a lifetime of learning.

Total Sponsored Research Expenditures

The tremendous improvements made in Gelman Library are essential to student and faculty recruiting and satisfaction, and the improvements made in facilities over the past few years are also viewed as critical to school identity, efficiency, collegiality, and strength.

GW continues to not only draw from, but to contribute to, intellectual life in the nation's capital. The Honors Program and University Seminars Program have made very positive contributions. At the same time, GW stretched the boundaries of its strategic location by creating a strong presence in the high technology corridor of Northern Virginia. The Loudoun County campus has contributed greatly to GW's research enterprise, as well as to relationships with Virginia institutions.

The increasing quality of GW students has been complemented by the improved quality of our faculty. We have enjoyed increasing success with the recruitment of first-choice faculty at all ranks. Additionally, the faculty recruited are, as a group, oriented toward our overall goal of raising the level and quality of research scholarship at GW. Achievements are highlighted by the faculty awards and honors listed in this report.

RESEARCH

Substantial efforts have been made since 1988 to strengthen creativity, scholarship, and research at GW. In 1989, we created a new position of associate vice president for academic affairs and research (now titled associate vice president for research and graduate studies) to serve as the central advocate and coordinator for programs that support research. Under this leadership, three advisory committees guide the research enterprise:

- The Advisory Council on Academic Research shapes research policy, charters, and monitors scholarly centers and institutes, and advises on the allocation of Research Enhancement Awards. These funds have been awarded since 1990 to highly productive research centers and institutes with the potential to attain "world class" status, as well as to promising ones that can achieve excellence with a base of support. Some 58 institutes and centers, representing every school in the University, are officially chartered now. The centers and institutes that received Research Enhancement Awards for 1997-98 are: The Center for the Study of Combustion and the Environment; the Center for Nuclear Studies; the Institute for European, Russian, and Eurasian Studies; the Institute for Materials Science; the Institute for MEMS and VLSI Technologies; the Laboratory for Advanced Computer Applications in Medicine; the Neuroscience Program; and the Robert Weintraub Research Program in Systematics and Evolution.
- The Council on Doctoral Programs reviews proposals for new doctoral degrees. The relationship between research and graduate education is a close and symbiotic one. Involvement in faculty research and scholarship enhances the student's learning experience; well-trained graduate students improve the quality of research.
- The University Committee on Research reviews applications to the University Facilitating Fund, a fund to support faculty scholarship in areas in which outside funding is difficult to obtain and to provide seed money so that faculty can do the preliminary studies often required to obtain major external funding. This committee annually reviews 70-80 faculty research proposals and funds about 20. Next year's award recipients will study such diverse topics as life in the 19th-century slums, the evolution of spiders, women's contributions to the rock music industry, and Islamic constitutional law. Deans provide additional support for the research of their faculty—for example, by purchasing equipment for new faculty members' laboratories and providing summer support for junior faculty research.

Other significant milestones in GW's quest to become a top-tier research university include the following:

- In 1991, GW expanded its research space with the building of the Virginia campus. The University allocated some $750,000 for equipment and wired the building to handle the latest information technology. In addition to providing research space to several School of Engineering and Applied Science faculty, the Virginia campus houses the GW Transportation Institute (including the National Crash Analysis Center), research run by the Department of Physics, and other projects.

- In 1993, a new associate vice president for research and graduate studies worked with advisory committees to write the University's first mission statement and strategic plan for research. The guiding goals, which still steer research planning, call for strengthening GW as a research-oriented University and enriching both undergraduate and graduate education in the process.
- The Office of Sponsored Research expanded its staff so that it could provide more and better support services to investigators seeking outside funding—everything from information about available funding sources, to help with budget and contract preparation, to advice on how to hire research staff and purchase equipment when the grant or contract is in hand. The University created the position of pre-award development coordinator in 1995 to help investigators prepare proposals for funding; meanwhile, the Office of Sponsored Research has been providing more information to faculty through its Web page, grant-writing seminars, and individual consultation. The Office of Medical Center Research serves similar functions for medical school faculty.
- Starting in FY 1993, the University began to return a percentage of the money brought to the University through sponsored research back to the investigators who obtained it, their departments, and their schools. These Research Enhancement Incentive Awards are reinvested in research, further strengthening GW's research capabilities.
- GW has increased recognition of its leading scholars. Since 1992, the Oscar and Shoshana Trachtenberg Prize for Research Scholarship has been awarded yearly to a distinguished scholar in an effort to recognize and reward excellence in scholarship. Award recipients to date have been Nozer Singpurwalla of operations research, Alfred Hiltzbeitel of religion, Alison Brooks of anthropology, David Ramaker of chemistry, Fred Abramson of pharmacology, and Akbar Montaser of chemistry.
- In March 1997, the University celebrated its scholarly accomplishments by holding its first University-wide research fair, the Scholars Showcase. The purpose was to allow students, faculty, and the broader community to see for themselves the impressive range of scholarly activity at GW. More than 300 faculty research posters, demonstrations, and presentations were featured, and faculty had many opportunities to talk across disciplinary lines about their common research interests.

These many investments in strengthening research at GW are paying off handsomely. GW is attracting more and more capable faculty members because they can see that it is a university that cares about research and seeks to become a top research university. Meanwhile, faculty

HIGHLIGHTS BY SCHOOL

COLUMBIAN SCHOOL OF ARTS AND SCIENCES

A Freshman Advising Workshop Program has been initiated, and is complemented by advising awards given to faculty nominated by students. Awards are given in the categories of freshman, major, and graduate student advising to help illustrate the importance that the school places on the involvement of faculty in high quality advising.

Columbian School faculty are increasingly working across disciplinary boundaries as evidenced by exciting new interdisciplinary programs in human origins and Judaic studies. In part to facilitate academic cooperation among faculty, a number of departments have been relocated for closer proximity to disciplinary neighbors. For example, most of the social science departments are now located in Funger Hall, while most of the humanities departments are in the Academic Center.

SCHOOL OF BUSINESS AND PUBLIC MANAGEMENT

Designed to enhance the academic and personal learning processes of undergraduate students, the School of Business and Public Management developmental program has been successfully combined with curricular revisions to attract more qualified applicants and to increase retention.

The creation of what is now called the F. David Fowler Career Center provides increased career assistance to graduate students with expansions expected to support all School of Business and Public Management students. Cooperative education placements have increased from 91 in 1990-91 to 215 in 1996-97.

attract more and more research funding from government agencies, foundations, and industry each year. Between 1988 and 1997, the University increased its total sponsored research expenditures from $33 million to more than $59 million. The Medical Center accounted for more than $24 million of the FY 1997 research dollars, about 41 percent of the total — and this does not count some research by medical school faculty based at the Children's National Medical Center and the Holland Laboratories. The importance of off-campus facilities, such as GW's Biostatistics Center in Rockville, Md., and the laboratories at the Virginia campus, is clear, in that much of the funded research was carried out away from the downtown campus. Among other things, GW's faculty have been studying the effects of alternative drug treatments on individuals with HIV infection, techniques of diagnosing cancer, the prevention of diabetes, the genetic heritage of endangered species, decision making on the Supreme Court, the earliest human civilizations, the chemistry of newly synthesized materials, nuclear physics, the management of national parks, the effects of unemployment on the family, the education of emotionally disturbed children, policy issues in sending humans into space, the prevention of international conflict, violations of environmental law, high-speed computer technology, the effects of automobile accidents on both cars and passengers, and the economics and management of tourism.

FACULTY AWARDS AND HONORS

One indicator of a faculty's strength is its receipt of prestigious awards and honors. These awards represent recognition, nationally and internationally, of the quality of the faculty's scholarly activities and research. For example, many GW faculty — more than 40 — have earned the honor of being elected fellows or members of major professional organizations, among them, the American Association for the Advancement of Science, the American Academy of Arts and Sciences, the National Academy of Sciences/Institute of Medicine, the American Bar Foundation, the American Law Institute, the Council on Foreign Relations, the American Physical Society, the National Academy of Public Administration, the International Statistical Institute, and the Geological Society of America.

Since 1988, faculty have received 41 Fulbright scholar awards to conduct their research and/or teach abroad. Faculty have received many other prestigious fellowships to support their scholarship: five from the Guggenheim Foundation; five from the Woodrow Wilson International Center for Scholars; five from the John D. and Catherine T. MacArthur Foundation; seven from the National Endowment for the Humanities; three from the American Council of Learned Societies; one from the Rockefeller Foundation; two from the Center for Advanced Study in the Behavioral Sciences; and eight other fellowships.

To illustrate, in 1996-97 alone, Fulbright fellowships allowed Nancy Benco of anthropology to travel to Morocco, and Bernard Mergen of American studies to go to Mongolia. Jerry Wiener of psychiatry was a guest scholar at the Woodrow Wilson International Center, and Alison Brooks of anthropology received a fellowship from the American Council of Learned

GRADUATE SCHOOL OF EDUCATION AND HUMAN DEVELOPMENT

Formerly located in several buildings on campus, the vast majority of faculty and staff have been relocated to the totally renovated former George Washington University Inn, thereby creating a stronger sense of identity and belonging among the faculty, students, and staff.

Recognized for its innovative programs, research orientation, and visionary faculty, the Graduate School of Education and Human Development was cited among the top 50 graduate schools of education in the nation in 1996 and 1997, as reported in U.S. News & World Report.

SCHOOL OF ENGINEERING AND APPLIED SCIENCE

Sponsored research activity within the School of Engineering and Applied Science has increased greatly, with research expenditures increasing from $53,000 per faculty member in 1987-88, to $100,000 per faculty member in 1995-96. Twelve research institutes and 10 research and instructional use labs were created during that time.

The school initiated an Introduction to Engineering course as a means of bringing all students together for instruction on engineering basics and adjustment to university life. It also established a program whereby carefully selected faculty members perform the regular undergraduate academic advising.

Societies. In addition, James Horton of American studies was selected CASE Professor of the Year for the District of Columbia by the Carnegie Foundation, and Melani McAlister of American studies received the Ralph Gabriel Dissertation Prize from the American Studies Association.

GW faculty also held positions of leadership in national organizations in 1996-97. For example, Gene Cohen of health care sciences was elected president of the Gerontology Society of America, and Harry Harding, dean of the Elliott School of International Affairs, was chosen president of the Association of Professional Schools of International Affairs. From anthropology, Douglas Ubelaker will complete his term as president of the American Board of Forensic Anthropology, and Roy Grinker will round out his presidency of the American Anthropology Association's Korean Studies Section. C. Dianne Martin of Electrical Engineering and Computer Science will remain president of the Recreational Software Advisory Council.

GW faculty also won important book awards in 1996-97. For example, Howard Gillette of American studies earned the National Award of Merit from the American Association for State and Local History for Washington Seen: A Photographic History. Michael Marquardt of human resource development won the 1996 Book of the Year award from the Academy of Human Resource Development, and Marc Saperstein, newly hired head of Judaic studies and professor of history, received the National Jewish Book Award.

Finally, several faculty have the honor and responsibility of editing professional journals and book series. These faculty include, William Becker of history for Business, Society, and the State, Jean Folkerts of media and public affairs for Journalism and Mass Communication Quarterly, Rachelle Heller of electrical engineering and computer science for Computer and Education Journal, James Herschberg of history for the Bulletin of the Cold War International History Project, Teresa Murphy of American studies for American Quarterly, Peter Rollberg of Germanic and Slavic languages for The Modern Encyclopedia of East Slavic, Baltic, and Eurasian Literatures, David Shambaugh of political science for The China Quarterly, and Christopher Sterling of media and public affairs and the Columbian School of Arts and Sciences for Communications Booknotes. All things considered, it was a productive and rewarding year for the faculty.

ELLIOTT SCHOOL OF INTERNATIONAL AFFAIRS

The school's research centers have had significant success in attracting government and foundation funds. The U.S. Department of Education has named the Elliott School a National Resource Center for International Studies, which will generate both programmatic support and graduate fellowships.

The number, quality, and diversity of master's degree students has increased significantly since 1988. At the same time, the curriculum has become more diverse and, at the graduate level, more professional in orientation. A new one-year master's degree program, the Master of International Policy and Practice, reflects a focus on the needs of mid-career students.

LAW SCHOOL

With only 23 of the 47 tenured or tenure-track faculty remaining from among those here in 1987-88, the Law School has hired 42 new faculty members. Outstanding, nationally known faculty members and deans from other law schools have been added to the faculty, as well as less senior faculty who have clerked for justices of the United States Supreme Court and published in prestigious law journals. Faculty diversity has also improved during this time.

The Law School has expanded its curriculum by 45 courses since 1987-88, created three new clinical offerings, and substantially enhanced the four existing programs specializing in intellectual property, international law, government contract law, and environmental law, which are now nationally recognized.

This year is off to a good start. In 1997-1998, Fulbrights will send Young-Key Kim-Renaud of East Asian languages to Korea, Janet Steele of media and public affairs to Indonesia, and Steven Tuch of sociology to Poland. Dina Khoury of history will enjoy a National Endowment for the Humanities fellowship to work at the American Research Center in Turkey, and Nadia Abu El-Haj of anthropology will benefit from a research and writing grant from the MacArthur Foundation. Finally, Caroline Long of Gelman Library will become the 1997-1998 president of the Reference and User Services Association. More good news lies ahead, no doubt.

GW faculty continue to look for new opportunities to join forces with government agencies and with business and industry to develop solutions to society's problems and to see that these solutions are made known and are implemented. And all the while, both undergraduate and graduate students are learning how knowledge in their fields is acquired by working with their faculty mentors on scholarly projects, both funded and unfunded. The future looks bright as GW continues to attract capable scholars and to offer them more of the support they need in order to make contributions to their disciplines, to the education of their students, and to society at large.

The faculty of our University continuously demonstrate that it is possible to sustain GW's longstanding commitment to excellence in teaching while attaining the highest levels of distinction in research as well. The bibliography that follows is prima facie evidence of the scholarly productivity of our faculty. Because the volume of the research reports, learned essays, and creative performances presented by our faculty colleagues during 1996-97 could in itself fill this entire report, we have had to be selective. Each faculty member was asked to name his or her most outstanding work. This year's selections not only include published articles and books, but also papers presented at national meetings, works of art and music, performances, and, as a testament to the times, there are even a few Internet addresses referenced.

The compilation of scholarly products that results is impressive by any measure, and further reveals the texture of GW's academic life.

Donald R. Lehman
Vice President for Academic Affairs

SCHOOL OF MEDICINE AND HEALTH SCIENCES

Research funding is increasing, particularly in the areas of foundation funding for health policy research and pharmaceutical support for drug trials and clinical research. In order to facilitate continued growth and interdisciplinary endeavors, the University created three institutes: the Institute for Biomedical Sciences; the Institute for Clinical Research and Clinical Trials; and the Institute for Health Policy Outcomes and Human Values.

The revolution in the health system has encouraged the creation of innovative new programs in health professions education. As the school makes additions to the curricula, it is also exploring new ways of teaching, including problem-based learning, community-based clinical experiences, and computer simulations.

SCHOOL OF PUBLIC HEALTH AND HEALTH SERVICES

The progressive growth of public health programs led to the creation of the new School of Public Health and Health Services, established July 1, 1997. The school combines the public health programs from the School of Medicine and Health Sciences, the health services management and policy programs of the School of Business and Public Management, and the exercise science program of the Graduate School of Education and Human Development. The school brings together more than 600 students and 3,500 alumni.

Education and service programs will be the focus of the five departments of the school. These departments are environmental-occupational health; epidemiology-biostatistics; health services management and policy; international public health; and prevention and community health. Expansion activities underway include continuing education programs, an emphasis on distance learning, an undergraduate minor, and new initiatives in health law, long-term care, school health, and management of care.

As of July 1, 1997, the University established the School of Public Health and Health Services, which combines the public health programs from other schools throughout the University. Works by professors in these schools are reported as part of those schools in this year's tabulation; next year we will report them under the School of Public Health and Health Services.

ADMINISTRATIVE AND INFORMATION SERVICES

The worldwide technological revolution has gripped American campuses since the 1940s — the decade in which the first operational computer was born. Not until the 1990s, however, did GW seriously dip both feet into the water that represents "high tech," and find, not surprisingly, that amazing benefits could be derived therefrom. Since its creation in 1989, the Administrative and Information Services division has spearheaded the University's computer systems and services enterprises and has, as well, substantially contributed to the advancement of The George Washington University in many other interesting and diverse areas. This report concentrates specifically on two of these spheres — technology and communications.

THE TECHNOLOGICAL REVOLUTION

While the first operational computer is only 50 years old, the proliferation of computers on our campus is really a 25-year phenomenon. The use of the super computer is an '80's event matched only by the advent of the personal computer (PC) and its use in the classrooms and offices of the University. Since the 1980s, in particular the late 1980s, the use of the computer on the desktop for higher education administrators, faculty, and students has grown to such an extent that few workstations at GW do not have access to one. Accounts on The George Washington University Information System (GWIS) already number more than 21,000. The growth of the campus operations is a story all its own, including the first key punch in Samson Hall in 1959 and Professor Harold Bright's grant proposal in 1963 that fathered academic computing at GW. The current speed with which technology is changing at GW is breathtaking.

The impact of rapidly expanding technology affects each and every function on our campus. Whether buying office supplies, "clocking-in," checking on a grade roster, seeking a student's grade report, or preparing "what-if" budget scenarios, the computer has become ubiquitous. The pressure this places upon those challenged to deliver services to support the use of technology and those charged with the hiring, training, and monitoring of the employees required to use it has increased dramatically during the past decade.

The need for technology in the operations of this University becomes clearer when one considers how our human resource personnel face the challenges in recruiting a more technically sophisticated group of employees. It provides yet another perspective on the impact of technology on our institution.

The efforts required to apply technology to our institution; to hire — train, and manage personnel at GW as well as to support and report the activities to an external world — continue to challenge our university. The trustees' technology initiative, which will release additional funds (estimated at more than $5 million per year), will have a significant positive impact. Human Resource Services will also experience benefits in its ongoing efforts at equal employment opportunities, its continuing changes in employee compensation, and its hiring and monitoring of the work force. Continuing efforts to retrain ourselves as managers and reengineer our processes and procedures to take advantage of administrative systems distributed to the desk-top are central themes. New ways of delivering old services as well as new services made available through technological advances are sought by all of our units.

COMMUNICATIONS – THE AGE OF PROACTIVITY

Just as the computer has become ubiquitous on campus, through the University's multi-faceted communications efforts The George Washington University itself often appears to possess a similar degree of ubiquity in the wider world. A decision made in the early part of this decade to offer the University as a venue for activities of national and international note has paid dividends. The use of our theaters and stages by CNN, C-SPAN, The White House, the offices of Cabinet members, and others has provided our students with access to the world's leaders. It has broadcast the GW logo into countless homes thousands of times. From CNN's Crossfire to The Kalb Report, from Firing Line to major policy addresses, GW has become one of the most often viewed universities on television.

Combining these opportunities with the ongoing work the staff performs with the media and faculty has permitted an acceleration in obtaining visibility for GW during the last decade. Not only does a broadcast of CNN Crossfire place us in potentially 60 million homes in 200 countries, but 75,000 GW mentions in the top 100 U.S. markets supports in print and other media the image of quality and diversity critical to our success in attracting students, faculty, and friends to the University.

GW's publications have grown and prospered during the past decade. ByGeorge!, The George Washington University Magazine, public relations pieces, and special publications for various offices have improved in visual quality and content. Certainly a highlight during the last decade was the work done for the 175th anniversary celebration which saw, among other publications, the printing of a GW history, From Strength to Strength, the first such historical review of GW since Elmer Louis Kayser's Bricks Without Straw.

The 1997 edition of The Fiske Guide to Colleges summarizes what has been going on at GW during the last decade:

GW has always had strong academic programs, and now, after six years of implementing new initiatives under the leadership of President Stephen Joel Trachtenberg, the University has developed a true sense of community and a strong vital spirit that attracts students from all over the country and world. Once barely distinguishable from the urban milieu that surrounds it, GW has become a distinct name in higher education.

TECHNOLOGY AT WORK

This report has focused on the two most dramatically changed areas of Administrative and Information Services during the years since our inception — technology and communications. It is likely that many, if not most, decade-long retrospectives being written today in America — whether they were being written for a corporate entity, a major unit of government, or a higher education institution — would reflect similarly striking changes in these two areas. It is important, however, that we not overlook the more service-oriented aspects of this division's work, which have also changed as a result of the new technology and have benefited from our new national and international visibility as well. Such entities as the Registrar's Office — where technology has, for example, rendered long registration queues "ancient" history — demonstrate clearly the benefit of the technological revolution that is derived by our primary constituency, our students. Other units show the benefits in other ways — from Lisner Auditorium to University Special Events, Human Resource Services, Equal Employment Activities, Training, Faculty Employee Assistance Program, and Quality Management Resources. All of these units are utilizing in many ways the advances in technology and communications to help GW set new standards for service, every day. There appears to be good reason for optimism about what lies ahead.

THE FUTURE

In "Behind the Curtain" from the Winter 1996 Wilson Quarterly, Chester Finn and Bruno Manno write:

The American university is a curiously inflexible institution. One of its chief peculiarities is that the only changes it can comfortably handle are tied to growth. Colleges and universities are subject neither to the discipline of a true market nor to any powerful internal constraints on spending.

Their observation underscores the tensions within our University during the last decade. The struggle for this institution has been to produce growth in visibility, stature, quality, and production while limiting expansion in physical facilities, academic programs, and personnel. While some subtle and other less subtle transfers of resources have occurred from one area of the University to another, the attempt has been to improve on quality rather than quantity.

Growth in quality is more challenging than constructing buildings, increasing endowment, or adding majors. For the past decade, GW has been about the task of growing quality and providing resources to support faculty and staff efforts in this endeavor. As we come to the end of the century, this institution finds itself struggling with the discipline of self-restraint on spending and a focus on the financing of higher education. Contrary to Finn's and Manno's declaration above, an internal constraint on spending has been very much a focus of this institution. Controlling our appetite to match available resources is a worthy challenge.

Certainly the end of this decade will find colleges and universities focusing on finances. This is not unlike the challenges for previous generations. The task in the past, however, was shared by administrators and boards as an internal matter. Now we find state legislators, members of Congress, the Executive branch, and the courts participating. The debate is as likely to occur on the front page of the newspaper or the six o'clock news as it is in the board meetings of institutions of higher education. There has never been a lack of projects, research, academic programs, or other initiatives in need of funding at colleges and universities. Institutions of higher education know how to grow and little about how to shrink. Too often we trim at the edges and end up partially funding as much as is possible rather than eliminating programs and activities altogether.

The years ahead bode well for GW if we are able to find the resources to fund what has proven in the last decade to be a winning strategy. The Trachtenberg era has been marked by one successful year after another, by growth and development throughout the institution and by a heightened public awareness about The George Washington University. The foundations are there for another decade of the same and certainly the administrative areas within Administrative and Information Services will be critical elements in developing and implementing the strategies for this continued success.

FINANCIAL REPORT

James Garfield once observed that if you sat Mark Hopkins, the brilliant president of Williams College, on one end of a log and a student on the other, "Why, there you have a college." However charming President Garfield's observation may seem, it is no longer adequate guidance for a modern university: logs are out, classroom buildings are in. The George Washington University counts its students by the thousand and calculates its expenses in the hundreds of millions. President Garfield and Professor Hopkins would be astounded by the variety of our degrees, the breadth of our services, and the size of our faculty, yet to us all are simply necessary parts of our mission—and history—of learning and service.

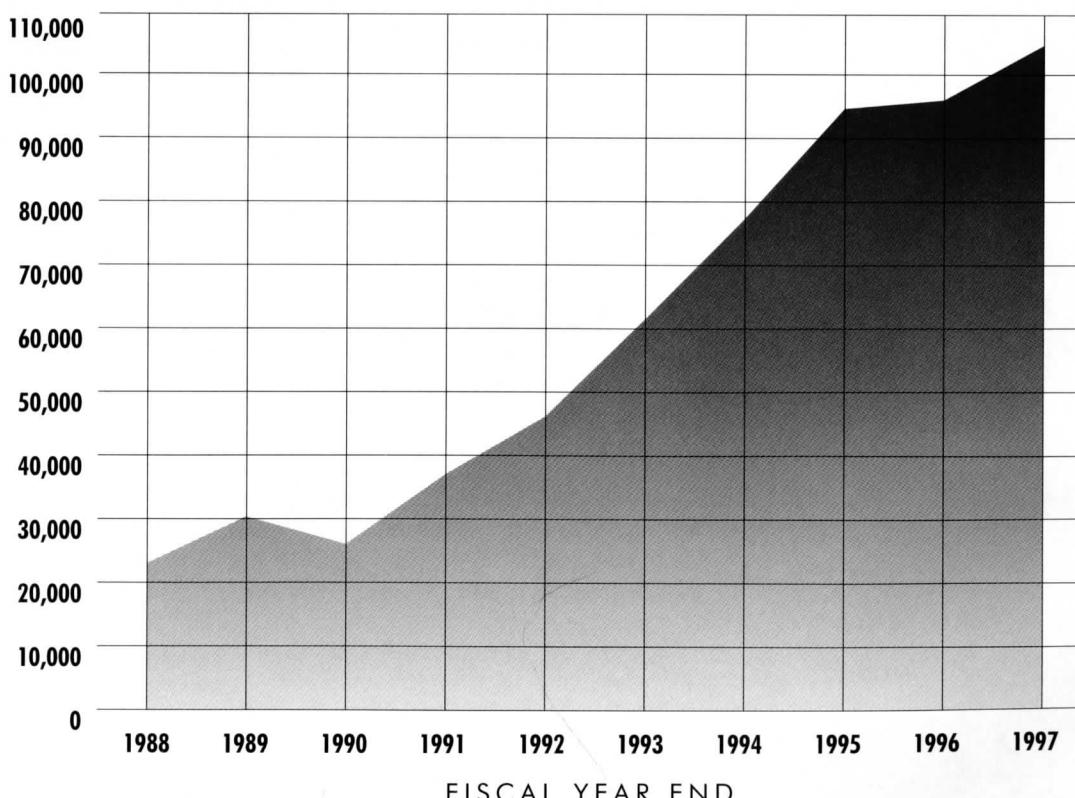

We have taken many financial steps to fortify the University's mission and to ensure a secure financial future for GW. They are: financial positioning, allocating resources, improving facilities, strengthening the campus identity, and improving service to the GW community.

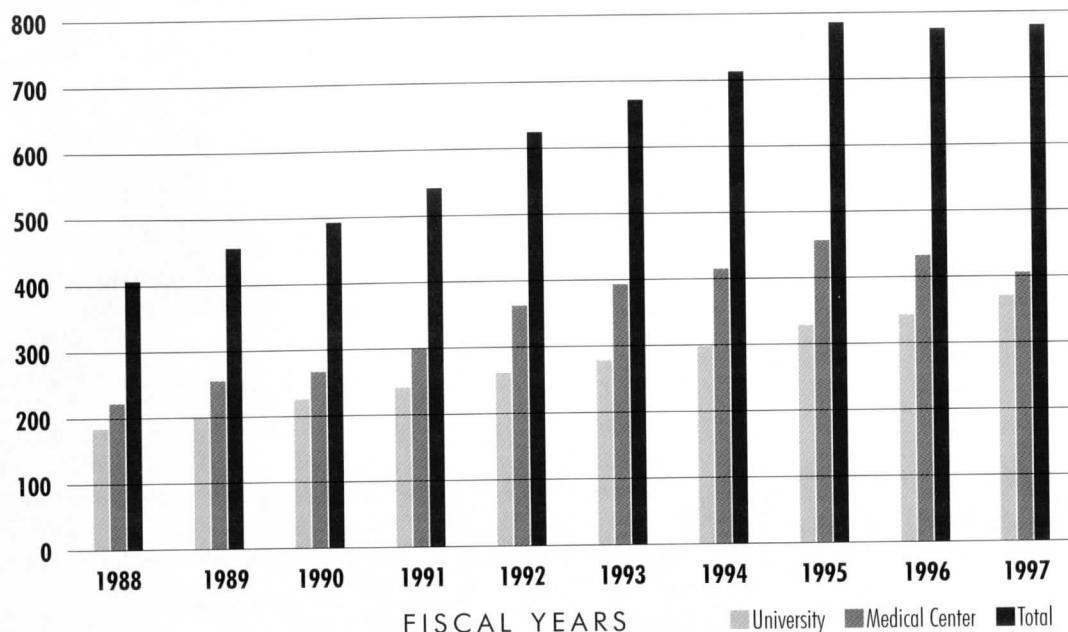

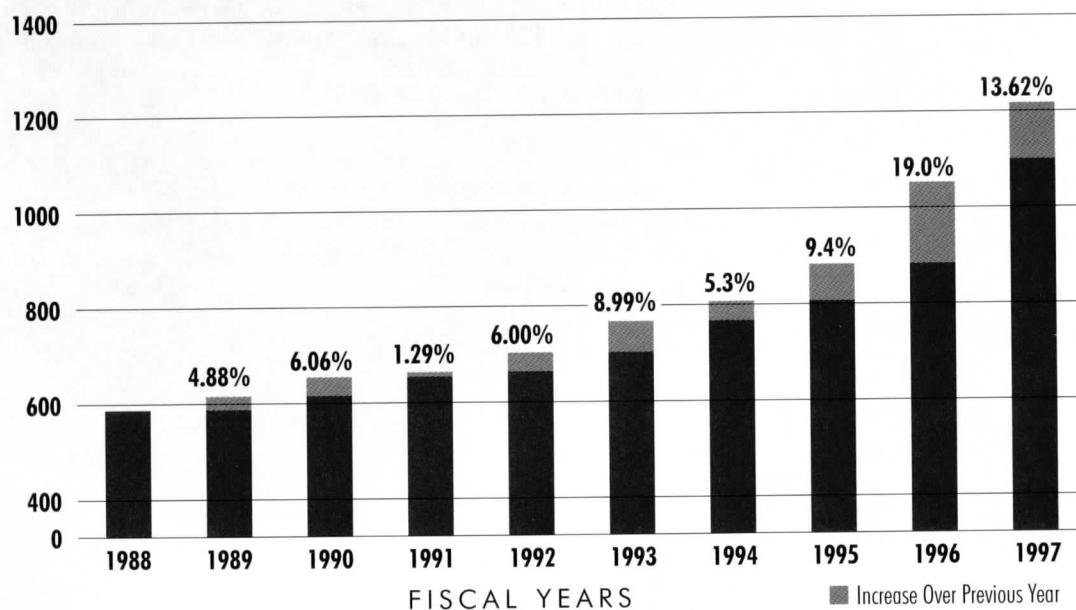

FINANCIAL POSITIONING

These years presented financial challenges, with ultimately encouraging results. With negative operating fund balances at the University and a rapid downturn in the financial condition of the Medical Center in 1988, the administration focused on a strategy of devoting a larger share of material resources to our mission of education while living within our means—by reducing administrative expenses and finding new sources of revenue.

The results have been revitalizing. Since 1991, after a few years of losses mainly attributable to declining hospital revenue, GW has maintained a balanced budget while allocating significant funds for capital renewal. From 1988 through 1997, the University's restricted and unrestricted operating funds have grown from a negative balance of $5.5 million to a surplus of $11.2 million (an increase of nearly $17 million). During this same period, the University set aside $25 million for capital renewal. Moreover, after the dramatic losses from 1988 to 1991 at the Medical Center, amounting to nearly $43 million, operating funds there have grown from $9.2 million in 1991 to $34.3 million in 1997. This growth of 272 percent was achieved even as the Medical Center set aside nearly $15 million for investing in its facilities. This improvement paved the way for the partnership with Universal Health Services, in which GW retains a 20 percent stake. The partnership will shift management and financial responsibility for the hospital to Universal, which has the expertise to run a strong teaching hospital necessary to GW and the community.

Total University Cash

Growth in Operating Budget*(in thousands of dollars)Total Assets(in thousands of dollars)*

The growth in GW's operating fund balances has produced concomitant growth in the liquidity of operating cash accounts. By balancing budgets, using debt for some capital projects, and creating set-aside reserves for others through capital planning, our year-end cash balance has increased by 359 percent—from $22.8 million in 1988 to $104.6 million in 1997.

New financial reporting formats will give us a stronger, yet more precise, tool for long-range planning and offer greater flexibility and clarity in presenting financial information to donors, lenders, and the University's board.

Keeping debt low and manageable has continued as part of GW's financial positioning. With an increase of only $61 million in debt since 1988, the University has financed the acquisition of properties, the construction of new buildings, and the improvement of physical facilities and information systems on campus—a total of $187 million of investment—without compromising fund balances or cash accounts. In fact, our ratio of debt to asset has declined from .33 to .21; of debt to operating budget from .48 to .33; and of debt to endowment from .87 to .48.

At the same time, we have taken steps to minimize our interest rate exposure. In 1992, we restructured much of our debt from variable to fixed rate through interest rate swaps. Approximately 43 percent of our debt today is fixed rate, compared to 25.5 percent in 1988. The creative management of our budgets, liquidity, debt, and interest rates has secured our position and creditworthiness in the financial marketplace where we have maintained a Moody's A1 rating since 1988.

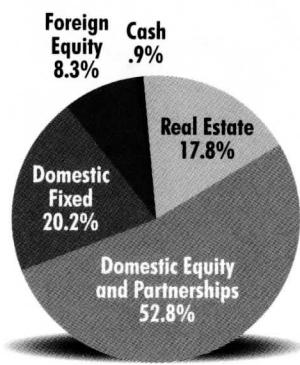

The University's endowment has grown from $224 million in 1988 to $534 million in 1997. New gifts represent $63.6 million of growth and real estate transactions, market appreciation, and return on investment represent the remaining $246.4 million. Some particularly noteworthy real estate transactions include: the recent sale of the PEPCO building, for a gain of $88 million; the acquisition and renovation of The George Washington University Inn for about $9 million; and the acquisition of the remaining 50 percent interest in 2000 Pennsylvania Avenue for $53 million with recourse and non-recourse debt. We look forward to continuing improvement in our endowment with our recent change to eight endowment managers and our broadening diversification in investment style and asset allocation.

Finally, the new financial reporting formats, in place since 1996 in response to the industry-wide ruling by the Financial Accounting Standards Board, will strengthen GW's financial analysis and planning. More like reports used in the business world, they will give us a stronger, yet more precise, tool for long-range planning and offer greater flexibility and clarity in presenting financial information to donors, lenders, and the University's board.

ALLOCATING RESOURCES

GW's principal focus since 1988 has been to allocate ever more resources to education, particularly to instruction, libraries, and student support, e.g., these areas have had an increase in spending of $124 million, more than twice the increase in administrative expenses over the same period. Since 1988, a significant share of expenses on capital improvement has gone to academic facilities, including: construction of the Virginia Campus for $24.1 million (FY 1992); creation of the Graduate School of Education and Human Development for $7.3 million (FY 1994); renovation of Lisner and Stuart Halls for $10.4 million to house the Elliott School of International Affairs and the School of Business and Public Management (FY 1996); and renovation of the Academic Center for $2.3 million (FY 1996).

By becoming more effective in how we manage many of our auxiliary enterprises and "outsourcing" other enterprises like the bookstore, travel management, campus mail, collegiate licensing, and vending machines, we have increased net income from Auxiliary Enterprises from $500,000 in 1988 to more than $6 million in 1997—and satisfaction with these services has never been greater. Like the partnership with Universal Health Services to run the hospital, outsourcing enables GW to concentrate on its mission while making available necessary services from experts without the distraction of providing them itself.

We have recognized that our mission of learning and service requires continuous investment and creative approaches to both acquiring and applying our resources. During this time, curriculum reforms and a series of new programs have encouraged the faculty to respond quickly to the interests of students and to attract new students. For example, a revenue-sharing program rewards departments for the creation of academic offerings that bring in new net income. And the University has been giving incentives to faculty to seek new research opportunities by offering principal investigators seed money for promising research.

The completion in 1991 of the Virginia Campus, a 71,000 square foot classroom and research facility in Loudoun County, Va., represents GW's largest venture outside of our main campus.

In addition to expanding existing programs, GW has grown through acquisition. The acquisition of the Graduate School of Political Management (FY 1995) and of Mount Vernon College (FY 1997) were responses to the need for a particular program in the former case and for strengthening women's studies through joint programming in the latter. Mount Vernon also provided GW with expansion opportunities through its campus of 23 acres in Washington, D.C.

While the history and good fortune of GW have always been tied to its location in Washington, the idea of "Washington" has changed as the area has grown and become suburbanized. Given demographic changes and interest in lifelong learning, the University has recognized that one central campus is not the only source of higher education. Our satellite campuses offer degree and non-degree programs that are particularly attractive to non-traditional students, and provide convenience without compromising educational standards. There has been significant growth in this area since 1988. GW's first satellite, the Tidewater Center, which has been offering programs for 30 years, moved to Hampton Roads in 1989 and expanded in 1994; Crystal City opened in 1986 and was expanded in 1988 and 1994; the Alexandria Graduate Education Center opened in 1995; and the 2020 K Street Center for Professional Education (offering primarily non-credit education programs) opened a fully refurbished state-of-the art facility in 1996. The completion in 1991 of the Virginia Campus, a 71,000 square foot classroom and research facility in Loudoun County, Va., represents GW's largest venture outside of our main campus. GW has also recognized the advantage of establishing partnerships with others, including businesses, to operate non-credit programs in Washington, the region, and in fact worldwide.

IMPROVING FACILITIES

Since 1989, GW has undertaken 174 capital projects worth $129 million, including the renovation of 129 classrooms and laboratories for $6.5 million. We have invested $49.5 million to acquire 40 properties on or near campus, as well as Mount Vernon College, in order to support the expansion of existing and the creation of new programs at GW.

The University's investment in land and buildings, the renovation of classrooms, the rehabilitation of student housing and the construction of new residences, the acquisition of town-houses to create new "homes" for programs, and the renovation of the Marvin Center's food service areas all reflect GW's belief in refreshing the sense of academic community and providing the setting and the means for learning.

STRENGTHENING THE CAMPUS IDENTITY

GW's appearance has always been functional and urban, but it is our academic home—or, as we said just above, a series of homes. The movement of some administrative offices off campus, the acquisition of other buildings, and substantial renovations have over the last three years enabled academic schools, which found themselves spread among several buildings, to reunite in one home, including among others: the Graduate School of Education and Human Development, the Law School, the Graduate School of Political Management, and the Elliott School of International Affairs.

GW's purchase of the Inn at Foggy Bottom in 1994 and its renovation as The George Washington University Inn in 1995-96 created a living room on the campus. A fine hotel with a first-rate restaurant, the inn offers meeting facilities and a convenient place for our visitors and others to stay near campus. It will also provide training for students in GW's International Institute of Tourism Studies.

A new university club, now in the planning stage, will be another gathering place for faculty, staff, and visitors. Meanwhile, establishing a reciprocal arrangement with the 1925 F Street Club for current members of The George Washington University Faculty Club, GW has presented its faculty with the opportunity to enjoy the amenities of one of Washington's venerable institutions.

The University has also taken the initiative to improve the appearance of the campus and to strengthen its sense of identity and community. Blue and buff flags brighten the streets and identify buildings. Distinctive trash receptacles mark the area (and help keep it clean). Some 80 teak benches provide places for relaxation and conversation. The 31,000 commemorative bricks on two major walkways, the 17 memorials to members of the GW community, the integrated signage, the rose gardens, and the Washington Circle gateway and the Professors Gate all make our urban campus more pleasant—and more distinctly GW.

IMPROVING SERVICE TO THE GW COMMUNITY

GW, like all universities, has changed in the last 10 years. Financial matters are more complex, non-traditional students have requirements universities may not have thought about years ago, and the number of transactions in any person's normal day has multiplied.

We continue to make improvements to our financial systems with a view toward streamlining administrative processes and increasing access to data. New integrated systems for student accounts and human resources have been installed which offer controlled on-line access to information to both students and staff. The implementation of an electronic time reporting system has reduced the flow of paper associated with the payroll function and expanded the information available to departmental managers. Financial reporting has been enhanced by making budget reports available to departments on-line, and through monthly budget status reporting to senior administrators.

A child-care center, the result of a collaboration by University staff and Bright Horizons Children's Center of Boston, opened in September 1996 for children from six weeks to six years. GW underwrites the rent for the center, which is operated by Bright Horizons.

After several years of planning, GW launched its "one card" program, called GWorld Card, in the spring of 1997. The GWorld Card will combine the existing uses of student and employee ID cards with capabilities for building access, meal plans, the bookstore, residential laundry facilities, vending machines, parking access (and fees and fines), and purchases at some local retailers.

CONCLUSION

The University's financial position is strong today, and we have every reason to be optimistic about the future. By managing our resources with all the skill we can muster and by seizing opportunities for both advantage and thrift, The George Washington University can look forward with confidence to financing the research, the bricks and mortar, the amenities, the scholarships, and the materials that advance our mission of learning and service.

DEVELOPMENT AND ALUMNI AFFAIRS

INTRODUCTION

Although The George Washington University was established in 1821 and benefited from philanthropy at critical points throughout its history, organized programs to mobilize alumni and secure gift support were modest prior to the 1980s.

This was also true of many non-profit institutions in Washington and reflected the reality of a transient capital city, dominated by government and international institutions. With few corporate or foundation headquarters, Washington was known as a difficult fund-raising environment, and before the 1980s, GW had yet to achieve the national visibility necessary to attract significant philanthropic support from beyond its home community. During the 1960s and 1970s, the University's leaders focused instead on a creative and successful strategy of building endowment through the development of University-owned commercial real estate adjacent to the campus. But, by the early 1980s, the University's rising reputation and the burgeoning Washington economy offered the opportunity to move forward with new strategies for university development. GW expanded its commitment to sustained fund-raising efforts, supported by a strengthened program of ongoing alumni communications and relations.

THE CAMPAIGN FOR GEORGE WASHINGTON

The Board of Trustees authorized in 1985, during Lloyd Elliott's presidency (1965-1988), a campaign to raise $75 million by 1990 for current and capital purposes, including endowment. While the University had undertaken various building-fund campaigns in the past, the Campaign for George Washington represented the first integrated, comprehensive fund-raising program in GW's history.

The campaign was facing a critical juncture in 1988, when Campaign Chair Oliver T. Carr, Jr. became chairman of the Board of Trustees and Stephen Joel Trachtenberg arrived as the new president. Despite this change in leadership, normally disruptive of fund-raising progress, Carr and Trachtenberg concluded the campaign in 1990, having achieved total commitments of $84 million and exceeding the goal by more than 10 percent.

The result of this campaign was not only additional resources, but also a heightened awareness and commitment—indeed, a new “culture”—regarding philanthropy and alumni participation at GW. Coinciding with the arrival of a new president committed to intensified development and alumni activities, this first GW campaign helped to set the foundation for greater achievements in the decade ahead.

BUILDING A BROADER BASE OF LEADERSHIP AND SUPPORT

School-Based Programs

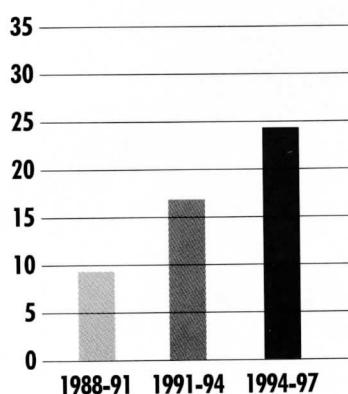

The Campaign for George Washington had been undertaken with a small committee of volunteer leaders drawn from the Board of Trustees, supported by a modest staff in the Office of University Development. While the Medical School and Law School had alumni associations of long standing, the majority of the University's alumni were served by programs offered through the General Alumni Association and a small staff based in the University Alumni Relations Office. Shortly after his arrival in 1988, President Trachtenberg approved a plan to broaden and expand GW's fund-raising and alumni relations efforts by involving the deans of the schools and mobilizing the dedicated constituencies of those schools.

President Trachtenberg also encouraged and assisted the schools in establishing advisory boards or councils to provide opportunities for prominent alumni, business, and community leaders to become more closely involved in planning and development efforts for each unit. In addition, there are today various advisory boards and councils focused on specific programs and departments. Members of the advisory boards provide important feedback and advice as well as a committed and informed cadre of advocates for help in fund-raising and other outreach efforts.

Alumni Programs and Communications

Alumni programs also have been significantly expanded since 1987. While 65 percent of GW's alumni live within an hour's drive of Washington, their dispersion across the country has increased steadily in the past decade. Regional alumni events have been increased concomitantly and a formal GW Alumni Club was established in New York in 1990. In order to increase contacts with GW alumni across the world, President Trachtenberg has undertaken overseas trips at least annually to attend events and to visit with individual alumni in Asia, Europe, Latin America, and the Middle East.

Alumni Support
(in millions of dollars)

New alumni programs have been introduced in response to changing demographics and university needs. One-third of living alumni (36,000 of 107,000) have graduated since 1988, and special efforts have been undertaken to develop their continued interest and involvement. Young alumni programs in the Law School and the University have been highly successful, drawing hundreds of individuals to activities and events. The Alumni Admissions Program has involved several hundred alumni in the recruitment of students. The success of men's and women's varsity basketball has made it possible to reconnect with thousands of alumni at events related to these games. A senior class gift program initiated in 1997 received commitments from an encouraging 23 percent of the class.

While the General Alumni Association (GAA) had been the primary focus of alumni involvement prior to 1988, the growth of constituent alumni associations has been the hallmark of the 1990s. These include school alumni associations, young alumni associations, some departmental alumni associations, and various alumni organizations based on common backgrounds and interests of individuals.

In 1995, President Trachtenberg and GAA President John Chaney appointed a special Alumni Committee on the Twenty-first Century, chaired by Trustee Robert Perry and former Trustee Barbara Callahan. Charged with studying the University's relationship with its alumni and making recommendations for change, the committee worked for more than a year. Its report led to a restructuring of the former GAA and the establishment in 1996 of the George Washington Alumni Association. This revitalized organization is designed to offer greatly increased opportunities for alumni participation and leadership in the years ahead and recognizes the complexity of alumni relationships with the University and its various components.

The introduction of GW Magazine expanded communication with alumni and projected an image of quality, fostering pride of association. A professionally managed telephone center was established in 1988, which was later expanded and fully automated in 1996. From this center more than 60 GW student callers contact alumni with regard to both alumni programs and annual giving. These and other ongoing communication efforts have helped to strengthen ties between the University and its extended alumni family. In response, alumni gift support has increased throughout the decade.

THE CENTURIES CAMPAIGN

By 1992, efforts to broaden the base of leadership and support throughout the University had advanced to a point that President Trachtenberg asked the Board of Trustees to begin planning for another comprehensive development campaign. Then-Board Chair Carr appointed Trustee Charles T. Manatt to chair a special campaign planning committee. President Trachtenberg appointed a campus campaign planning committee, including administrative and academic officers of the University, to identify needs and priorities and make recommendations to the trustee committee. Deans were encouraged to establish processes within their schools for the participation of faculty in identifying campaign priorities.

GW's visibility as a research university has contributed to a significant increase in support from national foundations over the past decade.

Gifts to Endowment
(in millions of dollars)

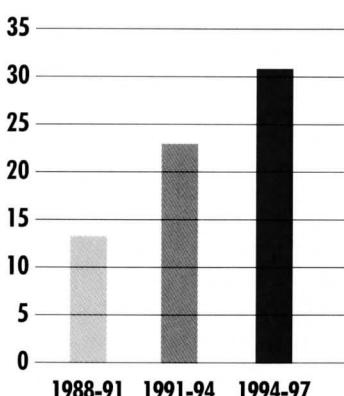

In 1994, the Board of Trustees authorized a $300-million comprehensive campaign, including $175 million for the University and $125 million for the Medical Center. Objectives of the campaign include $170 million for endowment, $100 million for support of current programs, and $30 million for equipment and facilities. The Centuries Campaign was announced on the occasion of the University's 175th anniversary in February 1996, with more than one-third of its goal already having been committed.

By the conclusion of the 1996-97 fiscal year on June 30, the University component of the campaign had achieved 60 percent of its overall goal. Within this overall success, the Columbian School of Arts and Sciences, the Elliott School of International Affairs, and the School of Engineering and Applied Science had reached more than 70 percent of their individual campaign goals.

The campaign's success has contributed to the growth of the University's endowment. The number of endowed chairs and professorships at GW has more than doubled since 1987, reflecting gifts to the campaign as well as a growing tradition of planned giving by alumni through life-income and estate plans. Donors of $100,000 or more are recognized through membership in The George Washington Society, established in 1990. The membership nearly doubled from 1996 to 1997 alone, reaching 171 by June 1997.

Foundation Support
(in millions of dollars)

Like all academic medical centers, particularly those in urban locations, the GW Medical Center has faced enormous challenges throughout the 1990s. These changes complicated planning for the Centuries Campaign as well as efforts to secure long-term philanthropic commitments in support of medical education and research. Recent announcement of GW's partnership with Universal Healthcare has helped to secure the future of the GW Medical Center and reassure donors of the continuing need for support of the School of Medicine and Health Sciences, the new School of Public Health and Health Services, and their various research institutions.

The Medical Center has raised more than $55 million toward its Centuries Campaign goal, and there is reason for optimism regarding the next several years. Establishment of the School of Public Health and Health Services has drawn considerable interest and support. For example, the Walter G. Ross Foundation gave $1,750,000 to endow the new school's deanship. Alumnus Harvey Wertlieb and ManorCare Health Services each have given $400,000 toward the establishment of the Wertlieb Center for Long Term Care Management within the new school. The Medical Center's research activity is capturing the attention of national corporations and foundations. GW's visibility as a research university has contributed to a significant increase in support from national foundations over the past decade.

Medical research has been the focus of several major gifts to the campaign, including a substantial gift from alumnus Catherine B. McCormick, M.D., to endow a fund for research in genetics. Endowed professorships in medicine given by alumnus Luther W. Brady, Jr., M.D., alumnus Dennis Shepard, M.D., and by the Walter Bloedorn Foundation also will assist the Medical Center in recruiting and supporting nationally recognized, research-oriented faculty.

IMPACT ON PROGRAMS AND PEOPLE

Although it is typical to report on the progress of a campaign through numbers and percentages, it is important to keep in mind that its real purpose is to advance academic excellence. Achievement of this deeper purpose is best illustrated by concrete examples that go beyond the tables and charts. Two examples stand out:

The largest single donor to the Centuries Campaign so far, and one of the largest benefactors in the University's history, is the J.B. and Maurice C. Shapiro Charitable Trust. Gifts from the Shapiro Trust and from Honorary University Trustee Dorothy M. Shapiro total more than $8.7 million and have endowed professorships, fellowships, and programs in three GW schools—the Elliott School of International Affairs, the Law School, and the School of Media and Public Affairs. Combined with University matching funds, the endowments created by these gifts will continue to provide substantial annual income with an enormous impact on these programs over the centuries.

The second largest gift to the campaign so far was from Dr. and Mrs. Robert Weintraub, who have given nearly $7 million. The late Dr. Weintraub was a long-time member of the GW faculty. Together with Mrs. Weintraub, he endowed five professorships in the Biological Sciences Department in specialties related to evolution. A grant of nearly $1 million from the Luce Foundation will support a professorship in the field of human origins. Together with a gift of $1 million from alumnus Philip Amsterdam, the Luce grant will propel GW's anthropology program to national recognition. These gifts offer an excellent example of synergy and the strategic "leveraging" of philanthropy to thrust academic programs forward to new levels of quality and recognition.

Gifts to the campaign also have enabled the University to strengthen its relationship with Washington, D.C., while at the same time advancing educational opportunities for its own students. For example, a grant of $750,000 from the DeWitt-Wallace Reader's Digest Foundation enabled the Graduate School of Education and Human Development to initiate a program training former Peace Corps volunteers for service in D.C. public schools. The Morris and Gwendolyn Cafritz Foundation has supported the Neighbors Project, through which GW students and faculty work with residents of the District's Shaw neighborhood. In 1997, the Fannie Mae Foundation announced a grant of $1,500,000 to support the Center for Excellence in Municipal Management in the School of Business and Public Management. This new center will train professional employees of the District of Columbia government and has a vision to expand nationally and internationally in future years.

CONCLUSION

GW's progress over the decade from 1987 to 1997 is appropriately represented by its fund-raising goals. The Centuries Campaign goal of $300 million is exactly four times the goal of the Campaign for George Washington, which was concluded just three years before planning for the current campaign began. The fact that the Centuries Campaign goal is being achieved illustrates the University's dramatic rise in recognition and renown, capturing the attention of national funding sources and engendering greater pride of association among alumni, parents, and friends of the University.

Despite its 176 years, GW is in many ways like a much younger university. In an earlier stage of its history the majority of students lived off campus and attended part time. Nearly one-third of alumni are graduates of the past decade, still young men and women in the early phases of careers and family obligations. And, Washington continues to present challenges as a fund-raising environment for education.

However, working counter to this set of challenges is GW's growing national reputation and the steady advancement of its graduates to positions of affluence and influence throughout the country and the world. The expansion of alumni relations and development programs over the past decade have positioned the University to benefit in full measure from the increasing potential these trends will provide over the next decade.

In the Centuries Campaign, GW states its case for support in terms of “opportunity” and “excellence,” citing the need to preserve its historic commitment to accessibility and to the needs of Washington while also pursuing its aspirations as an elite research university. These two themes have been coincident throughout GW’s history, and the feelings of individuals toward the University as an institution often surround one or the other. They represent not necessarily competing values, but two perspectives on the University’s role and mission. The challenge for the future is to weave together these two traditions—to continue GW’s rise into the top tier of American higher education while also remaining true to our historic strengths and responsibilities. Doing so successfully will produce a truly distinctive institution and can enable us to retain GW’s traditional base of support while also expanding the interest and commitment of new constituencies.

To all of those who may be prompted to propose that the title of this report should be "An Historic Decade" rather than "A Historic Decade," a tip of the presidential hat. You're absolutely right. And so are we. That is to say, research reveals that it would be appropriate either way and that we could anticipate that whichever choice we made, some of our friends would be in contact to share their grammatical knowledge. We decided to stick with our other friends, not to mention the University of Chicago Manual of Style and the AP Style Guide, two respected authorities—which is not to say that one couldn't find respected authorities indicating "an historic."
